THE LONG LOOK AHEAD

Chapter One. Matthew 24:1-3

How would you like to know the future? Who does not want to lift, if possible, the curtain that hides the things to come in the future as well as he can the past? Many are trying it today with varying degrees of success, but the only book with a 100% record is the Bible. That's one of the things that makes it such a fascinating book. It is always up-to-date and filled with pertinent, often exciting information. In fact, it is more than up-to-date-it is ahead of the times.

There are many predictive passages in both Old and New Testaments, but none is clearer or more detailed than the message given by Jesus himself as he sat on the Mount of Olives overlooking the city of Jerusalem during the turbulent events of his last days before the cross. These words have immense significance for us for they are a revelation of the ultimate fate of earth in our time (about A.D. 32*) he looks ahead to foretell the destruction of the city of Jerusalem and the disturbances connected with this singular event. He looks on across the centuries and outlines the perils that lie between his first and second coming, the very age in which we live. He looks past the present day to that time which he calls "the end of the age" and sets forth for us in searing and vivid detail, culminating in his own return to earth and the ushering in of a new day.

Unfolding Events

As we read his perceptive words we shall discover that what is coming is but the unfolding of events which will grow out of movements and processes already at work in human society. The future has already begun, and our Lord's outlining of it greatly help us to understand what is taking place in our own day. In this first chapter we shall look only at three verses which introduce Christ's amazing message to us and provide for us the key to its structure and the events out of which it flows. The first three verses of Matthew 24:

"Jesus left the temple and was going away, when his disciples came to point out to him the buildings of the temple. But he answered them, 'You see all these, do you not? Truly, I say to you, there will not be left here one stone upon another, that will not be thrown down.'"

"As he sat on the Mount of Olives, the disciples came to him privately, saying, 'Tell us, when will this be, and what will be the sign of your coming and of the close of the age?'"

It sounds strange to us that the disciples should come to Jesus at this time and point out to him the beauty of the Temple. He had often seen the Temple and the disciples had frequently been with him as he taught in its courts. Why then their question in the buildings? It all grew out of the astonishment of these disciples at the recent actions of the Lord. The chapter opens with the pregnant phrase, "Jesus left the temple." When he left the Temple on this occasion he never entered it again. He left it pronounced upon it a sentence of judgment, recorded in the closing words of chapter 23:

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, killing the prophets and stoning those who are sent to you! How often would I have gathered your children together as a hen gathers her brood under her wings, and you would not! Behold, your house [the Temple] is forsaken and desolate. For I tell you, you will not see me again, until you say, 'Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord.'"

All of this comes at the close of the most blistering sermon he ever delivered. It was addressed to the scribes and the Pharisees and consisted of a series of "woes" pronounced upon the hypocrisy of these religious leaders. They were supposed to be the righteous people but were actually hindering them from knowing the truth of God. Jesus began his ministry with a series of eight Beatitudes, Matthew 5), and he ended it with a series of eight woes.

Nothing arouses more vehement anger in the heart of God than religious hypocrisy. Throughout the Scriptures, God's terms of blessing are reserved for those who profess to know him but who behave quite contrary to their profession- especially the hypocrites and the unrighteous.

Cleansing the Temple

Having completed this sermon, Jesus for the second time, cleansed the Temple of the money-changers. John records this (2:13-21) which occurred at the beginning of the Lord's ministry. Many do not realize that he did this twice, but Mark records when he came to Jerusalem for the last week, he went into the Temple and began to drive out those who bought and sold. Mark records a most significant action of our Lord's. Mark says, "he would not allow anyone to carry anything through the Temple" (Mark 11:16).

This strongly suggests that he stopped the priests who bore vessels through the Temple in order to bring the blood of sacrifices offered in the outer court into the holy place where it was to be sprinkled before the altar. Jesus arrested this process, a close, for the first time since the days of the Maccabees, the offerings of Israel! They were later resumed by the Jews, but with no meaning or divine sanction. When Jesus himself became upon the cross "the Lamb of God which takes away the sins of the world" thereby declared all other sacrifices as no longer of any meaning or value.

Then, having stopped the sacrifices, the next day the Lord stood in quiet dignity and pronounced the official sentence of doom:

"Behold, your house is forsaken and desolate. For I tell you, you will not see me again, until you say, 'Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord.'"

Having said this he left the Temple, and the disciples went with him. Silently, they walked down through the valley of the Tyropseon to the other side to the Mount of Olives. There Jesus took his seat, upon one of the rocks that overlooked the city and the Temple. The disciples were troubled and confused. They could not understand his actions or his words concerning the Temple. The Temple was the center of the nation's life and they regarded it with holy awe as the very dwelling place of God among his people. It was famous throughout the earth and they could not believe that God would allow any harm to come to it. So they began to question Jesus the strength and beauty of the Temple.

To this he responds with words which distress them even further:

Truly I say to you, there will not be left here one stone upon another, that will not be thrown down.

They cannot believe that this will happen. They knew, of course, that the nation was under the bondage of Rome. The Romans had authority in their own city or land. But it was well known that the Romans were lovers of temples. It was their boast to preserve, if at all possible, the temples and monuments of any country they conquered. They had been in power in Palestine for years and they had not destroyed the Temple. There seemed no good reason, therefore, why this Temple should ever be destroyed. Jesus solemnly assures them that there would not be one stone left standing upon the other.

Test of a Prophet

We shall surely miss the full meaning of this sentence if we fail to see that Jesus is giving here his credentials as a prophet. One of Moses' requirements required that whenever a prophet essayed to foretell the future it was necessary that he give a sign by which his words could be tested. That requirement is found in Deuteronomy 18. In the midst of a prophecy concerning the coming of the Messiah, Moses said, "The Lord your God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among you, from your brethren-him you shall hear. Then, a little later, he quoted God as saying: "I will raise up for them a prophet like you from among their brethren; and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak to them all that I command him. And whoever will not give heed to my words which he speaks in my name, I myself will require it of him." (Deuteronomy 18:18, 19)

Many Bible scholars agree that this prophecy was a foreview of the coming of Jesus Christ. He was that prophet, raised up among the people of Israel, who would be like Moses and would speak words that the nation should hear. Moses was the prophet of the law, and Jesus was the prophet of the gospel.

"...but the prophet who presumes to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, and who speaks in the name of other gods, that same prophet shall die.' And if you say in your heart, 'How may we know the word which the LORD has not spoken?'-when a prophet speaks in the name of the LORD, if the word does not come to pass or come true, that is a word which the LORD has not spoken; the prophet has spoken it presumptuously, you need not be afraid of him." (vv. 20-22)

In the practical carrying out of that admonition it became customary for the prophets to give the people a prediction of what would occur in the near future. When it came to pass as foretold, the people would know that this was indeed an authentic word from God. But if the sign did not occur as predicted, the prophecy in its entirety was to be rejected as not from God, and the prophet was to be considered a false prophet.

as false. So Jesus predicts the downfall of the Temple in the near future as a sign that all else he includes in this discourse is what lay behind the request of the disciples for a sign associated with his coming.

In Luke 21:20, we have other details of this predicted overthrow of the city and the Temple. There Jesus adds, "But when Jerusalem surrounded by armies, then know that its desolation has come near." Forty years later, the Roman armies came in and fulfilled the prediction to the very letter. With Titus was a Jewish historian named Josephus who recorded the event in minute detail. It was one of the most ghastly sieges in all history. When the Romans came the city was divided among factions of Jews, who were so at each others' throats that they paid no heed to the approach of the Romans. Thus, the Romans surrounded the city while it was distracted by its own internecine warfare. The Romans assaulted the walls again and again every opportunity to the Jews to surrender and save their capital from destruction.

During the long siege a terrible famine raged in the city and the bodies of the inhabitants of the city were literally strewn like cordwood in the streets. Mothers ate their own children to preserve their own strength. The toll of Jewish suffering was so great that they would not surrender the city. Again and again they attempted to trick the Romans through guile and perfidy. When the walls were breached Titus tried to preserve the Temple by giving orders to his soldiers not to destroy or burn it. But the soldiers against the Jews was so intense that, maddened by the resistance they encountered, they disobeyed the orders and set fire to the temple. There were great quantities of gold and silver which had been placed in the Temple for safekeeping and ran down between the rocks and into the cracks of the stones that formed the Temple and the wall around it. When the soldiers finally took the city, in their greed to obtain this gold and silver they took long bars and pried apart these metals. Thus, quite literally, not one stone was left standing upon another. The Temple itself was totally destroyed though the area upon which the Temple was built was left partially intact and a portion of it remains to this day, called the Temple Mount.

In this remarkable fulfillment, confirmed so strongly by secular history, is convincing proof that God will fulfill every promise of this amazing message fully and literally. As Jesus himself said in the discourse, "Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will not pass away." With the certainty of its fulfillment underscored so strongly, let us now note the clue to the structure of the message as given in these opening verses.

Three Tough Questions

There are actually three questions which the disciples ask the Lord. The first is,

"Tell us, when will this be, and what will be the sign of your coming and of the close of the age?"

They mean of course, the destruction of the Temple. As we have already seen, the answer is recorded by Luke. It would be the sign that saw Jerusalem surrounded by armies. A number of them were still living when Titus fulfilled the prediction.

The second question is, "What will be the sign of your coming?" The third is "[What will be the sign] of the close of the age." These questions are perfectly natural in view of the instruction of Moses to ask for a sign when prediction is attempted. What is interesting is that there is a great deal of difference between what the disciples had in mind when they asked these questions and what they had in mind when we read them. They asked out of confusion. There were many things they could not see, or would not believe, and their questions were difficult to answer. They were much like the little boy who asked his father: "Daddy, why does the sun come out during the daytime when we don't need it, and not at night when we do?" That kind of question is difficult to answer, not because it is hard, but because the question is so wrong. To some degree, that was the problem here.

In many ways we can understand much better than they what their questions meant, for we have the history of two centuries back upon. Also we accept the importance of Christ's death and resurrection, against which they were in revolt. They could not understand all that he said to them. He had been puzzling them for months and they were now quite out of harm's way. He had told them plainly of his coming death and resurrection, but they refused to give heed. Since they would not allow themselves to face the terrible specter of his death, they could not have any clear idea of what he meant when he said he was coming again.

Thus, when they asked him here about his coming they did not have in mind a second advent. They did not picture a coming of heaven to earth, nor anything at all of what we mean when we speak of Christ's second coming. They had in mind a coming of a revolution and the crowning of Jesus as King and his subsequent presence among the nation as its acknowledged King. They used a very interesting word for coming. It is the Greek word, "parousia." This word appears four times in this passage (verses 3, 27, 37, and 39). It is not the usual word for coming. It means more than the mere arrival of some person; it also means a continuing presence after he arrives. This is important, for much of the understanding of this discourse will turn upon this word.

this word. The English word "coming" appears other times in the message, but it is not the same Greek word and has a different meaning.

Even after the resurrection these disciples were still asking Jesus questions that reflected a political concept of his coming. They asked, "Lord, will you at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" They were obviously still thinking of a political kingdom over the nations of the earth. He did not deny that this will eventually occur, but simply reminded them that the times and seasons are in the Father's prerogative to determine. Thus, when they asked him on the Mount of Olives, "What will be the sign of your coming?" it was not a question about his coming again, but of his presence in the nation as its king. But, as we shall see in our Lord's answer, he treats it as a legitimate inquiry concerning his second advent.

The Close of the Age

They also ask for a second sign, concerning the close of the age. It is not, as in the King James Version, "the end of the world," but has nothing to do with the end of the world. The world will go on for a long time after the events of the Olivet Discourse. The close of the age will end with those events. In this matter they were much more clearly informed, though they unquestionably did not know the time that lay immediately ahead. They were sure that they were living in days approaching the end of the age and that they would enter the events that would mark the close of the age.

We must remember that these men were well acquainted with the Old Testament. They also had heard Jesus teaching about the kingdom (Matthew 13) and had heard him speak of a close of the age when he would send his angels throughout the world to judge the men to judgment. They knew the Old Testament predictions of Messiah's rule and reign over the earth. Doubtless they knew Daniel's remarkable prophecy (Daniel 9) that there would be a period of 490 years, (seventy weeks of years, or 490 years) for the rebuilding of Jerusalem after the Babylonian captivity until the time of Messiah the Prince. From the prophecy they must have known that the 490 years were almost completely expired, and it was little wonder that they expected the close of the age to be near.

What they could not see and could not be expected to see was that there would occur a wide valley of time between the events they asked their question and the close of the age in the far distant future. We cannot blame them for this, for it is difficult to distinguish the two comings of Jesus in the Old Testament prophecies. Peter wrote that the prophets foresaw "the suffering and the subsequent glory." But to them it seemed as if they were one great event. What looked to them to be one great fulfillment was actually two widely separated ranges with a great valley of time in between.

For instance, in Isaiah 9 there is a well known prediction of a coming child. "For to us a child is born, to us a son is given, whose government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name will be called 'Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace.'" That is referring to his reign in the days of the kingdom which would cover the earth. It will not be fulfilled until the Lord returns again, but these two events are brought together into one verse with no hint of any intervening time.

The Sign of the End of the Age

The Lord now takes their questions and in answering them reverses the order. They ask for the sign of his presence and the sign of the end of the age. He answers the last one first. The sign of the close of the age is given in verse 15, "the desolating sacrilege...standing in the holy place." We shall examine that much more fully later on. The sign of his presence is given in verse 30, "then will appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven." This, too, we shall examine in detail in due season. Throughout this whole passage the Lord takes pains to make clear to his disciples that the end of the age lay far in the future. Here in this great prediction are illustrated two great principles of prophetic fulfillment. First, there is often an unspoken time which may operate to delay final fulfillment far beyond what may otherwise be expected. Jesus warned in Acts 1:6, "the seasons [are] not for you to know," but remain always in the Father's sovereign choice. The second principle is that of fulfillment. When Jesus predicted encirclement of Jerusalem by hostile armies and its conquest and overthrow, it was fulfilled in the letter less than forty years later. But that historic fulfillment became in turn a preview of another day in the far distant future when again Jerusalem would be surrounded by armies and would face its hour of destruction on a greater scale than ever before. This will be the close of the age. The age which is thus to be closed is the age in which we now live.

Notice that Jesus speaks to these men as though they would live to see all the events he predicts. Obviously, therefore, he speaks to them as representative men. Some of them saw the destruction of Jerusalem as he had foretold it, but none would see the close of the age, and none would pass through the Great Tribulation. They were uniquely representative men. They were both of Israel and the church. At the time he spoke to them they were Jewish believers, men of Israel, all of them. All represented the nation and God's dealings with that remarkable people. But after the cross and Pentecost they were the Church, neither Jew nor Greek. They would then belong to a unique body which has a task to fulfill throughout the centuries before the end times. Thus the message includes truth for the church in its relationship to the present age and Israel in its time of trouble to come at the end of the age. These disciples are representatives of both groups and of them as such.

As Jesus sits looking out over the city he is facing the darkest hour of his life. He knows the scheming of his enemies and the opposition that even then is sharpening against him from almost every quarter. He knows what Judas is planning. He knows they are doing their nefarious deeds in secret, but he knows it all. He knows the frailty of his friends and that he cannot count on them. These very disciples who cluster around him on the mountain will in but a few hours forsake him and flee. One will even deny him with curses. He knows all that. He sees the darkness of the coming centuries but he looks through that darkness to the light beyond. When all around him seems utterly hopeless he quietly declares what the end will be, without the slightest uncertainty or doubt.

All things, he says, all events, will find their significance and meaning in relationship to him. Any event which is not in his purpose in the age is worthless and useless, without real meaning or significance. As we listen to his declaration of what human history will be, we must each face ab

THE AGE OF CONFUSION

Chapter Two. Matthew 24:1-14

"What will be the sign of your coming and [the sign] of the close of the age?" This is the question the disciples ask. Jesus stands on the Mount of Olives with the faithless city spread out below him. We have noted already that the question is not very clear. The concept of his coming is not at all clear, and they think that the close of the age is perhaps only a few years away. The answer Jesus gives is at first seemingly evasive or at least indirect. Matthew says,

And Jesus answered them, "Take heed that no one leads you astray."

The Big Point-Don't Be Fooled!

In our understandable haste to come to the great events he predicts for the future, let us not miss the heavy emphasis on the opening word. It is the dominant note of this whole discourse. The age will be a time of great uncertainty as to the time of the end. It will be frightfully easy to misinterpret and therefore be misled. The phrase "lead astray" forms the structure around which the message is built. He used it again in verse 5,

"For many will come in my name, saying, 'I am the Christ,' and they will lead many astray."

again in verse 11,

And many false prophets will arise and lead many astray.

Once again in verse 24,

"For false Christs and false prophets will arise and show great signs and wonders, so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect."

Because of this continuing possibility, the Lord's exhortation throughout the message is, "Watch!", i.e., keep your eyes open. Evaluate! Test! Try the spirits! Bring everything to test that you might understand the true character of movements and events. The predominant note of the age will be one of deceit and confusion. Then he proceeds to show to these men that they were confused in their thinking that the end of the age lies immediately ahead. From verse 5 through verse 14 he clearly indicates that there would be a rather long, indeterminate period before the end of the age would begin. These men knew from the prophecies that the end of the age would not be a single spectacular event but a series of events, covering several years. The Lord begins to describe the age which they could not see, the parenthesis of time in which we now live. If we note carefully the time phrases that lead up to the answer to the disciples' question we shall have no difficulty with this section. He is most emphatically calling this "signs of the times" here. To the contrary, he repeatedly indicates that he is tracing the age. For instance, he says, "And you will hear of wars and rumors of wars; see that you are not alarmed; for this must take place, but the end is not yet." Therefore, despite the commentators who insist that "wars and rumors of wars" are a sign of the near approach of the end, he says quite otherwise. In verse 8 he adds,

"all this is but the beginning of the birthpangs."

He is saying, in effect, "These events are but leading up to the end of the age about which are asking! The first five verses

How then shall we characterize these events he outlines which are to occur in the intervening time before the end of the age? They are of enormous importance to us for we live in this time before the end. If, as we have seen, the dominant note is to warn against the allure of the false, the glamour of the phony, and to indicate the ease by which the uninformed are led astray, then it is immediately evident that in these intervening events he is listing the perils of the age. These are the powerful forces by which men and women, observing the events of their day, may be misled into confusion and error. To faith are forces, deceptive in their character, which will mislead men throughout the whole course of this intervening time. They make it difficult to believe, they act powerfully upon men's minds to turn them from the unseen spiritual kingdom to the things of sense and time. Each peril, when once introduced, runs on to the end of the age.

Phony christs

Let us now examine these perils one by one. The first, in verse 5, is the peril of the counterfeit,

"For many will come in my name, saying, 'I am the Christ,' and they will lead many astray."

The apostle John wrote at the close of the first century, "For many [antichrists] have gone out into the world." The text does not indicate someone who is openly against Christ, like an atheist or a pagan. Rather it is one who appears in the name of Christ in this sense opposes true Christianity. It is a counterfeit Christ.

Of course it includes the originators or propagators of all the false cults which have arisen throughout the course of the age with the first century. We have witnessed the rise of many in the last few decades, especially those with the label, "Christianity," like Jehovah's Witnesses, Mormonism, Christian Science, and others. These are outwardly Christian in language and appearance, but their basic message is anti-Christian, rejecting the true Christ. Any person or organization which purports to be Christian in name and aspects, but whose message is actually opposed to Christian faith is an antichrist. It is the rise of these groups our Lord foresees as a peril to faith they have proved to be.

But by no means are these the most deceptive of the anti-Christian voices. Perhaps our Lord is thinking of even subtler ones. We will miss the full meaning of his words if we look only for those who actually say, "I am the Messiah," or "We have the Christian message." Are they not more dangerous who claim to do what only Jesus Christ alone can really do? "I am the way," says that lonely Man who died forsaken upon the Cross. "We are the way," say all the many voices that attract today: political movements, social work, literacy crusades. These are often really fine works, but they claim to meet the basic problem of human existence. They are antichristian. Their claim is false, and many are deceived throughout the course of the age. They offer to lead men into a false forgiveness, and thus are really evil masquerading as angels of light. How many are being misled by these siren voices? How many are turned from the narrow way by which an individual is confronted with the person of Jesus Christ—the one way to redemption and forgiveness of sin?

Conflict

The second peril Jesus foresees is that of conflict.

"And you will hear of wars and rumors of wars; see that you are not alarmed; for this must take place, but the end is not yet. For nation will rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom..."

Clearly he is not predicting any one specific war, or revolution. He is characterizing the general course of the age. It is a time of continual turmoil among nations, and the fears, the alarms, the degradation, the horror, the misery, of war. His words are intended to bring together all the effect that wars produce on the human heart.

What a threat to faith war is! Many a young man has been deceived by the glory of war and has left home to proudly fight in the carnage and slaughter of battle his eyes have been opened. He has come home, disillusioned, sickened by it all, and continually fighting bitterness and despair. That is the deceitfulness of war. Many can still remember the horror of the atomic bombing hanging over Hiroshima, the scream of air-raid sirens, and the terrible challenge to faith these events had produced. How many have a flickering of faith in bitter resentment against the wars in Viet Nam or Korea?

Natural Calamity

Another peril Jesus foresees is natural calamity.

"...and there will be famines and earthquakes in various places: all this is but the beginning of the birthpangs."

For almost two thousand years these natural calamities have been occurring. They are not, therefore, "signs of the times" that simply states that during the intervening age there will be famines, pestilences, earthquakes, and other natural disasters that will be a threat to belief in God. Sometimes Christians mistakenly try to convince skeptics that God is love by pointing to the beauty of nature. They describe the beauty of the sunset, the glory of the mountains, the abundant provision in the natural world for the benefit of man. But what becomes of that argument when the tornadoes and earthquakes bury one's children in their ruins, and parents must watch their children's swollen, distended bodies with no food to give them? What argument for the love of God as revealed in nature?

How do you preach God's love to those who are stumbling along in dumb terror, fleeing the horror of a volcano which is spewing smoking ashes and burying their homes and cities? Who has not felt the shivers of doubt that come when we read of events caused by natural calamities and must square them somehow with our concept of a God who rules and reigns in the heavens? Granted, such doubt can be answered by a clearer understanding of the purposes and workings of God, but how do you, pressured by grief to believe the apparently obvious and will not wait for an explanation? Surely we need our Lord's wisdom to heed that no one leads you astray."

Persecution

Another terrible threat to faith appears in verse 9,

"Then they will deliver you up to tribulation, and put you to death; and you will be hated by all nations for my name's sake."

Here the peril is a religious persecution. This began shortly after the day of Pentecost when Stephen and James were scattered. Who is not familiar with the terrible stories of Christians who were thrown to lions, burned as human sacrifices by wild beasts, killed by gladiators, tortured, torn apart by wild horses, or martyred in other dreadful ways? Another great martyrdom broke out at the time of the Reformation in the 16th and 17th centuries. We can read the accounts in all the details in Fox's Book of Martyrs.

But do you know what is the most tortuous century of all? The century in which more Christians have died for their faith than in any other is the 20th century! It is estimated that more Christians were tortured and slain in twelve months during World War II than under Rome in all the early centuries. In the city of Seoul, Korea, ten thousand Christians have already suffered martyrdom for their faith. Some authorities claim that over fifteen million Christians have been slaughtered in Russia, Soviet-controlled Europe, and Communist countries. Since Christianity began, no generation has seen such world-wide persecution as is now in progress.

We can scarcely realize the cost of discipleship in certain places of the world. Recently a Christian magazine contained the story of a young Arab who had turned from Islam to Christ. The magazine told his story only because it could add in a footnote that he now lies buried on a hillside in his own native land. (He was slain by his own relatives.) We can now print his testimony because he no longer suffer recrimination for it." Ask yourself, how many have wanted to be Christians, have heard the message, have turned to Christ by the preaching of the good news, but have taken a long look at the price they must pay in terms of misunderstanding, exclusion and ridicule, and have quietly melted back into the crowd? Jesus spoke of seed that would fall on shallow ground and would not grow up, but when the sun came out in burning heat, it would wither and die. How many in America would disappear from the earth if persecution began to break out? What an enemy to faith it is. How the heart trembles and quavers before the thought of this, sometimes even of misunderstanding!

Apostasy

Then the Lord put his finger squarely upon another peril to faith,

"And then many will fall away, and betray one another, and hate one another. And many false prophets will arise and lead many astray. And because wickedness is multiplied, most men's love will grow cold."

Undoubtedly we are approaching, in these words, the end of the age. A gradually increasing manifestation of evil is in its end. And what does all this mean? Is this not a description of that sneering contempt for standards that are now widely forsaken?

"And many will fall away, and betray one another, and hate one another."

This is the terrible pressure of apostasy. When combined with persecution it represents a powerful double attack upon Christ. It is highly disturbing to be left standing alone; to see, one by one, those who previously were on your side, succumb to the pressure and leave you unsupported and alone. If they also betray you in the process, it is almost unbearable. "Demas...has [forsaken] me, [having loved] this present world," writes the apostle Paul from his cold prison in Rome. A man of a dauntless spirit as his, that must have been a severe blow. What young person today does not feel the pressure of the contempt for sexual and social standards that were once held by almost all? How many have thus "fallen away," driven by a philosophy of moral relativism that teaches that only the situation can determine whether a thing is bad or good? A philosophy openly advocated by leaders of the church, who can help but feel his faith tremble a bit?

Cynicism

In close connection with this Jesus adds, "And many false prophets will arise and lead many astray. And because wickedness is multiplied, most men's love will grow cold." Here the peril is cynicism. It is cold and brutal indifference which arises from the teaching of "false prophets." Do not read this as though these are religious men, necessarily. The false Christs the Lord earlier were unquestionably religious, but here he uses the term "prophet." It refers to any who speak authoritatively: professors, scientists, statesmen-those leaders of thought who shape and mold the thinking of common man. What is the sanctity of self-interest, the insistence on having "my rights" no matter what happens to the other fellow. The true prophet stands on the rights of God, but the false prophet upholds only the rights of man. Jesus predicts that a tragic and inevitable result will follow. First, many will be led astray by the false teaching of the leaders of thought; "because [of this], wickedness [will be] multiplied" (the Greek word used here for wickedness is "anomia," lawlessness); and the result of lawlessness is, "most men's love will grow cold."

One needs only to read the daily papers to see how true this is. The overthrow of moral limits always destroys the fire of love. The psychologists and philosophers who seek to measure the pulse of our times tell us that the major problem is meaninglessness-the loss of fire in life, the coldness of the human heart. Since men cannot live without fire they replace the false fire of lust, and its inevitable consequence, hate. Watch those who feel they can, with impunity, step over the boundaries of the past. See how they grow hard and callous and cynical. Life becomes for them an increasing tangle of emptiness. There seems little reason to doubt that here is the explanation for the rocketing divorce rates of our day and for the frequency of sex crimes and crimes of violence. Often these are accompanied by moral apathy and callous indifference. Recently the papers reported the cases of two mothers who lost all natural affection. One threw her baby in the path, the other left hers on a dump heap. How true these words are: "because wickedness is multiplied...love...grow[s] cold."

Anti-Christian Currents

Here are the clanging gongs that Jesus says will be sound throughout the age, to drown out if they can the still small voice. He warns against the peril of counterfeit faith, of human conflict, of natural calamity, and callous cynicism. These are the powerful currents that flow throughout the age, gathering as a vast and resistless flood of deceit; distorting, twisting, and misleading men are deceived and misled and the whole race is at last swept along over the brink of destruction into the blackness of the world's last day.

How can anyone resist this? Who is equal to those pressures? Who has the wisdom to distinguish the truth from error? Who can point out the way of faith when these things are happening?

The Power To Stand

Fortunately for us, Jesus does not stop with this black picture. He goes on to a further unveiling. It is of enormous importance that we understand the secret power-the power to stand against deceit and delusion and to avoid the fate of being "led astray." The key to that corner word "but."

"But he who endures to the end will be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom will be preached throughout the whole world, as a testimony to all nations; and then the end will come."

Despite the pressures, despite the impossibility of the natural mind's remaining undeceived, despite the subtle siren voices, nevertheless, some will see through the distortions, the perversions of truth, the silken deceptions, and will stand to endure to the end. These will not and cannot be overthrown. They will be saved. The end referred to here is not the end of the world, obviously, no one could live through the entire twenty centuries of this intervening age. What Jesus means here is that those who endure to the end will be saved. These words of Jesus are often distorted to mean that if someone does his best to hang on and live a good clean life to the end he will be saved. But it is quite the other way around. If he is truly saved, then he will endure to the end and his endurance makes obvious to all that he is saved.

No doubt it is true that there is no use having a good beginning if there is not a strong finish; but it is equally true that there is no possibility of a strong finish unless there has been a good beginning. Only those who have genuinely found Christ will endure to the end. What our Lord is bringing out here is that the strength of character which permits them to stand fast demands a great deal of power, for they are exposed to an unceasing flow of pressure. They can stand only if there is power available that sustains them every single moment of the way. That power is revealed in what these people say. They will not stand, but they will endure. "This gospel of the kingdom," Jesus said, "will be preached throughout the world, as a testimony to all nations." The preaching reveals the secret of their ability to stand. They tell everywhere the story of One who "has delivered us from all iniquity, darkness and transferred us to the kingdom of his beloved Son" (Colossians 1:13). Amid the pressures of the age they have heard and obeyed the good news, and there stands with them One whose very life is imparted to them and who sustains them against all the deceit of the world in which they live.

It was the Lord himself who said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." No matter how the flood of deceit flows, and opposition mounts on every side, still they will follow him. Why? Because, as he goes on to say, "I give them eternal life; and they shall never perish, and no one shall snatch them out of my hand. My Father, who has given them to me, will keep them all, and no one is able to snatch them out of the Father's hand." This is what keeps them and makes them able to stand against a flood of deceit. They will move against the stream, sometimes in blood and tears and terrible loneliness, but they will endure.

The Hour No One Knows

When this good news of "the kingdom of his beloved Son" has been preached as a testimony to all nations, then shall the signs of the age begin, said Jesus. That is one unmistakable mark of the approaching end. It is supremely significant that this preaching is the first generation in twenty long centuries of which it may be unreservedly said that the gospel is being preached throughout the whole world to all nations. This is properly a "sign of the times" which marks the near approach of the end. When the signs of the Last Day begin to moan, and the panicky, jostling crowd tries to get in the door at the last moment, then will be unveiled the deceitfulness of the age. But only those who have learned to walk day by day will be able to endure to the end.

In the light of this clear revelation of the character of the age, the exhortation of Jesus takes on new impact. "Watch, for you do not know on what day your Lord is coming." The question he leaves with us is: What is there in your life that is different from another's? Do not prate about outward religious differences. They do not count. They can all too easily be a part of the deception that leads to destruction." Have you stood at the narrow way and done business with the One who says truly, "I am the way and the life." Is his life in you? Has he come to indwell you, to strengthen and keep you every day by a continual impartation of life through you, in terms of your personality? This alone will make the difference. The test of reality is endurance, and those who thus stand have every really known him.

Prayer

Father, how confusing are the voices we hear, how accurate is our Lord's prediction that these voices will be sound. How increasing clamor to deceive us, mislead us, pervert, and destroy us. How thankful we are for that other voice, the voice of the Holy Spirit who interprets to us the truth of Scripture. Help us to ask him to begin his wonderful work of sustaining, empowering and strengthening, till we can stand in the midst of the flood of deceit around us. In Jesus' name, Amen.

THE WORSHIP OF MAN

Chapter Three. Matthew 24:15-22

"Then shall the end come?" With these dramatic words, Jesus begins to answer the question of the disciples, "What of...the close of the age?" He has prefaced these words with a powerful telescopic view which sweeps through all the centuries and describes their character as one of deception and confusion. Now he focuses upon the (to the disciples) which he calls "the end of the age." Without further delay he describes, in Matthew 24:15-22, the sign of the close of the age. "So when you see the desolating sacrilege spoken of by the prophet Daniel, standing in the holy place (let the reader understand) let those who are in Judea flee to the mountains; let him who is on the housetop not go down to take what is in his house, neither let him who is in the field not turn back to take his mantle. And alas for those who are with child and for those who give suck! Pray that your flight may not be in winter or on a sabbath. For then there will be great tribulation, such as has not been since the beginning of the world until now, no, and never will be. And if those days had not been shortened, no human being would be saved; but for the sake of the elect those days will be shortened."

The Lord's language here is the most somber he could employ. He is speaking of a time of trouble that is coming, the like of which has never been seen before in all human history. It will be a time of superlative distress, of unprecedented peril to humanity, of shattering, staggering suffering, such as has never been seen before. There have been many black moments in history, but none like this. For those who will be living in Judea (in and around Jerusalem), it will be a time to act promptly and quickly. It will be a time for emergency action. There will be no time left for the usual occupations of life.

These words are so fantastically suggestive that we must not hurry over them. In the words appearing in parentheses, "let the reader understand," the apostle Matthew is warning us that there are things hidden here which are not apparent on the surface. We must think, investigate, examine, and thus understand all that may be involved. We must be careful, then, to relate these words to the Scriptures, and especially to those in the Book of Daniel which Jesus specifically mentions.

Daniel's Prophecy

For the present let us seek to understand this sign of the close of the age. It will be, says Jesus, "the desolating sacrilege spoken of by the prophet Daniel." No book of the Old Testament has been so unfavorably dealt with by the critics as the Book of Daniel. The validity of its authorship by Daniel has been scorned and it has been ascribed to some unknown writer who lived no more than 160 years before Christ; its prophetic content has been flatly denied; and in many ways it has been more violently attacked than any other book in the Bible. Yet it is sheer presumptive arrogance for any alleged disciple of Jesus Christ to take a view of Daniel which contradicts the view of the Master. The Lord Jesus here clearly regards the Book of Daniel as a valid prophecy, inspired by the Holy Spirit, and accurate in detail.

The sign our Lord refers to is mentioned in Daniel at least three times. It is the sign of a man, a man who offers himself to be worshipped as God. The disciples clearly understood that he was referring to the predictions in Daniel of the coming of the abomination which would take away the continual burnt-offering of the Jews and instead offer himself as "the abomination which makes desolate." The desolating sacrilege. That man is described in Daniel 8:23-26:

"And at the latter end of their rule, that is, the rule of certain kings who will come upon the world's scene in the Middle Ages, when the transgressors have reached their full measure, that marks the time when evil has come to its full expression], a king of bold countenance, one who understands riddles, shall arise. His power shall be great, and he shall cause fearful destruction, and shall succeed in what he does, and destroy mighty men and the people of the saints. By his cunning he shall make deceit prosper under his hand, and in his own mind he shall magnify himself. Without warning he shall destroy many; and he shall even rise up against the Prince of Princes; by no human hand, he shall be broken. The vision of the evenings and the mornings which has been told is true; but seal up the vision, for it pertains to many days hence."

A Double Fulfillment

Note that Daniel was told that the vision was not concerning his own days but "pertains to many days hence." The vision was fulfilled in the turbulent days of the Maccabees in 168-165 B.C., when a Syrian king, Antiochus Epiphanes, did desecrate the Temple in Jerusalem, offer a sow upon the altar, and erect a statue of Jupiter to be worshipped. But this was undoubtedly an historic foreview of the final "abomination of desolation" it could not have been the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy for otherwise Jesus would not have said, more than 165 years after Antiochus, that men could yet expect to see "the sacrilege spoken of by the prophet Daniel, standing in the holy place."

Another reference in Daniel to this sacrilege is found in chapter 9. It is in the midst of the tremendous prophecy that is the vision of the seventy weeks." This was an announcement to Daniel by the angel Gabriel that God had marked off a period of seventy weeks (seventy weeks of years), which would begin when the Persian king, Artaxerxes, issued a commandment to rebuild the Temple in Jerusalem (fulfilled in 445 B.C.)* It would terminate with a period of terrible trouble during which a coming prince would cause Jewish sacrifice and offering to cease and would thus establish the abomination which makes desolate.

The angel said that first seven, and then sixty-two of those weeks (a total of 483 years) would end just before the prince would be "cut off." A period of indeterminate length would then intervene before the 70th or final week (seven years) would begin. The first seven, and then sixty-two begin. During that indeterminate period the city of Jerusalem would be destroyed and would endure wars and desolations until the end. The actual words are these in Daniel 9:26, 27:

"And after the sixty-two weeks, an anointed one shall be cut off, and shall have nothing; that is clearly the crucifixion and the people of the prince who is to come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary [This was fulfilled under Titus forty years after the crucifixion] shall come with a flood, and to the end there shall be war; desolations are decreed. And the prince who is to come shall make a strong covenant with many for one week; and for half of the week he shall cause sacrifice and offering to cease; and upon the wing of abominations shall come one who makes desolate the abomination of desolation until the decreed end is poured out on the desolator."

One further glimpse of this remarkable "prince who is to come" is given in Daniel 11:36-39. There he is called simply

"And the king shall do according to his will; he shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak astonishing things against the God of gods. He shall prosper till the indignation of the great Tribulation is accomplished; for what is determined shall be done. He shall give no heed to the gods of his fathers, or to the one beloved by women; he shall not give heed to any other god, for he shall magnify himself above all. He shall honor the god of fortresses instead of these; a god whom his fathers did not honor; he shall honor with gold and silver, with precious stones and costly gifts. He shall deal with the strong fortresses by the help of a foreign god; those who acknowledge him he shall magnify with honor. He shall make rulers over many and shall divide the land for a price."

All of these passages in Daniel agree concerning the coming of a man who shall be the fulfillment of our Lord's prediction of the sign of the end of the age. There are also other references in Scripture to this man. Paul is unmistakably describing him in 2 Thessalonians 2:3, 4:

"Let no one deceive you in any way; for that day will not come, unless the rebellion comes first, and the lawlessness is revealed, the son of perdition, who opposes and exalts himself against every so-called god or object of worship, so that he takes his seat in the temple of God, proclaiming himself to be God."

Once again, we have a clear description of him in the Book of Revelation, where John describes him in 13:5-8:

"And the beast was given a mouth uttering haughty and blasphemous words, and it was allowed to exercise authority for forty-two months; it opened its mouth to utter blasphemies against God, blaspheming his name and his dwelling, that is, those who dwell in heaven. Also it was allowed to make war on the saints and to conquer them. And authority was given it over every tribe and people and tongue and nation, and all who dwell on earth will worship it, every one whose name has not been written before the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb that was slain."

Before he uttered these words on the Mount of Olives, Jesus himself had referred to this coming man when he said to the nation on one occasion, "I have come in my Father's name, and you do not receive me; if another comes in his own name you will receive." (John 5:43). This is that Antichrist which has been predicted in all the Scriptures, and who shall symbolize all that stands against God. There are many other references to him in the Old Testament prophets but we do not have to consider them all.

Will the Temple Be Rebuilt?

Perhaps you are asking, "If the temple was destroyed by Titus in A.D. 70, what is this 'holy place' in which the Antichrist will appear?" The obvious answer is, the temple must be rebuilt in Jerusalem. The Lord is clearly indicating that there will be a time when the Jews will repossess the temple area. In view of that expectation perhaps the most important event since the capture of Old Jerusalem by the Jews in the Six Day War of 1967. For the first time since 1897 years (since A.D. 70) the Jews are once again in possession of the temple site. It is now occupied by the Moslem mosque called the Dome of the Rock and the presence of that shrine raises a tremendous obstacle to the rebuilding of a Jewish temple. But there is no other place it can be rebuilt. It is decreed in the Old Testament that Jewish sacrifices can be offered there and nowhere else on earth.

No one knows whether the present possession of Jerusalem by the Jews can be maintained. And how they will surmount the obstacle of rebuilding a temple on the place now occupied by an Arab holy place is anyone's guess. But rebuild it they shall, for in another connection the "scripture cannot be broken." Rumors appear from time to time that plans for such rebuilding have been completed, and even that the building itself has been partly prefabricated and is ready for assembly at almost any time. But all these reports must be taken with a grain of salt for prophetic interest is now running high and the wish is often father to the thought.

A Literal Event---A Specific Place

"When you see," said Jesus, "the man who fulfills the qualifications described in the Book of Daniel, sitting in the temple claiming to be God, then you will know that the end of the age has arrived." It will be a literal event to occur in a specific place on earth at a definite moment in time. The prophecy of the seventy weeks in Daniel, already referred to, clearly indicates that there remains a seven-year period to be inaugurated before the prophecy is fulfilled. It also declares that it is in the middle of the seven years that the Antichrist will desecrate the Jewish Temple by his claim to be God. It is evident, therefore, that it is only the last and one half years of this seven year period which can be properly called "the end of the age." This is also designated as "the time of the end" lasting for forty-two months (Revelation 13); a time, two times, and half a time, (Daniel 7); and one thousand two hundred and threescore and three days, (Revelation 12). These all add up to three and one half years. Daniel also calls this the "time of the end."

But the sign of the desolating sacrilege does more than mark the beginning of this end time. It also describes it. The signs are never intended merely to be milestones by which we can mark off the progress of time. They are, instead, intended to reveal hidden principles of the time in which they appear. For instance, the Jews were continually demanding of Jesus that he give them a sign that he was the Messiah. He said to them, "No sign shall be given...except the sign of the prophet Jonah." He went on to explain: "For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, so will the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." (Matthew 12:39,40). His own burial and resurrection, then, was to be the sign. When that comes they will understand the meaning of his coming.

The sign of the resurrection did not come at the beginning of his ministry but rather at the end. But it dramatized the coming. It stands forever as a symbol of the new life he came to give, the new principle by which men are intended to live in the new creation. The sign here is also of that nature. It is not intended to mark the beginning of the end of the age, and it is not of that character. It is a literal sign, but also symbolic.

Seeing the Invisible

If we could learn to read life rightly, almost everything is a sign. God is forever visualizing-materializing the invisible forces in human affairs into visible events. As we observe the events we can gain insight into what is going on behind the scenes, the secret behind all matter. We see visible objects around us—a table, a chair. We say we understand what is made of wood, plastic, or metal. But every one who is acquainted with modern science knows that this is not the whole story. What we see is the visible manifestation of invisible forces. Electromagnetic forces join together the atoms and makes up the objects that we call wood, plastic, or metal is really an invisible force making itself known in terms of a visible object. Some of the events that occur in the realm of events as well as objects. When the event takes place that Jesus describes, and the Lawless One sits in the Temple of God it will be because, throughout the world, humanity has already enthroned itself as the only god man needs. The sign in the Temple will be the visible representation of that world-wide fact. The day is coming, Jesus says, when the triumphant scientific method, as we know it today, will bring man to confirm himself in the deadly delusion that he is his own god and need any other. In that day the words of Psalm 2:1-3 will be fulfilled:

"Why do the nations rage, and the peoples imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and His anointed, saying, 'Let us burst their bonds asunder, and cast their cords from us.'"

But that is the day when God will laugh, says the same Psalm, and he will say, "I have set my king on Zion, my holy [Son], lest he be angry, and you perish" (vv. 6, 12). God will have the last word, though man for the moment seems to win. This is a "holy place" in the human spirit. It is the place that was intended by God to be the royal residence for His Holy Spirit. Man can become what God intended him to be: the human expression of the divine life, the means by which the invisible God is made visible in human affairs. But in that place man enthrones himself and renounces and rejects all other forms of authority. There is nothing greater than man.

The triumph of the philosophy of humanism will not come suddenly into world affairs in the last day. The apostle Paul wrote on his own day, "the mystery of lawlessness is already at work." (2 Thessalonians 2:7). It had begun even in the first century. John wrote, already "many [antiChrists] have" (2 John 1:7). No, it will not be a case of a sudden intrusion into the realm of human events. This idolatry of man has been building up throughout the centuries and is rapidly approaching the crisis. It will manifest itself, as the Lord describes, in a clear symbol of the times.

In our own day this lie of humanism grows gradually more powerful and persuasive. You can hear it on every side, in a thousand subtle variations. Recently a prominent scientist demanded that the scientific methods of observation, experiment, and logic be applied to the solution of the terrible moral and social problems of our day. Now there is nothing wrong with that idea. What is wrong is the confidence expressed in his conclusion which indicated that nothing else is needed to solve men's problems. If it would [be applied] it would lead to a psychozoic kingdom [whatever that is] on earth for the ever-evolving human species. It is the empty dream, the web of illusion that man can be his own god, that he can live full and complete life without reliance on the authority and Lordship of Jesus Christ.

You can hear this lie when someone says, "I'm not going to worry about someone else; I've got to think of myself first." You can hear it in business when young men are told, "Look, if you want to get ahead in this company you've got to forget about all other people." You can hear it in the fashionable ideas of cheating and lying. There really are no such things, you know. It's only thinking that makes them so. You see it on us daily on television and radio, and every magazine paints it in living color. We are all subjected to a constant din beating our ears, telling us that we can live complete and healthy lives without the need for God through Jesus Christ.

It is not that the world does not acknowledge a certain place for God, but that it is usually a very small place. It's nice to go around once in a while, especially if you're inclined to be religious. Certainly it's all right to set aside one morning a week to go to church and tip your hat to him, but you can live a perfectly wonderful life without that. If that helps, fine, but if it doesn't, that's all right. How widespread this philosophy is today! Man makes all the rules and can handle all the problems. Man exists for his own sake and will go down with anyone who thinks otherwise. That idea is dominant equally in the communist East and the capitalist West. The widespread attitude will demand a figure, a leader, in whom all the excellencies that man sees are personified. It will find its expression in a man who shall appear, to satisfy the hunger for hero worship in the world.

The Bitter End

When this man appears the world will be ready to follow him to the end. But what is that end? Listen again to the Scripture that describes the desolating sacrilege spoken of by the prophet Daniel. "Literally it means that abominable thing which creates a desolate land. How do you depict desolation? Most would think of a desert, a howling wilderness, a lifeless, dreary waste with the eternal wind blowing and the torment across scorching barren sand. Already there are many lives like that today. Increasingly we hear pitiful reports of people, women, and even boys and girls, who experience nothing but futility and live lives of barren desolation. Why? Because of the abomination that makes desolate. Because of the abysmal lie that man can be his own god, that we have somehow found inadequate resources to satisfy, that we can find in some busy round of activity or pleasure that which meets the deep hunger of the heart.

When men give themselves to that lie it is the abomination that makes desolate, and the desolation is in abundant evidence. Psychologists tell us the major problem today is meaninglessness, desolation, futility. Life is all surface and no depth. The suicide rate is rocketing to new heights. Jesus saw all this as he looked ahead across the centuries. It was little that the tears rolled down his face as he looked out over the rebellious city below him, where already the abomination desolate had begun its evil work. He wept over the stubborn city as he weeps over the stubborn hearts of men today.

Against this background of increasing desolation the gospel came as glorious good news. When Jesus sensed the emptiness of many lives in his own day, he said, "If any one thirst, [Where do you thirst? In a wilderness!] let him come to me and whoever drinks of his heart shall flow rivers of living water." The solution for thirst in a desert is to drink, endlessly and continuously. There is an old hymn by Horatio Bonar that puts it very nicely.

Behold, I freely give
The living water, thirsty one.
Stoop down, and drink, and live.
I came to Jesus, and I drank
Of that life-giving stream.
My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,
And now I live in Him."

He's the answer. But notice what stands in the way. It is man's pride. He does not want to stoop down, to drink. We must acknowledge the fact that we are dependent, even helpless. Man resists that, and because he does he will not stoop. If he stoops he cannot drink. But if he does stoop and drink, he will, as the hymn declares, live! It will not be but one drink, but a continual drinking, and therefore, a continual living. This is God's answer to the terrible emptiness and futility of our day.

We can be sure that as the age goes on to its close, things are going to get worse. The sense of futility will deepen, the pressures will increase, the pressures will become more intense. Yet through all those darkening days the gospel will offer its gift of life. Its invitation, "Thirsty one! Stoop down, and drink, and live"

No one ever needs to learn to drink. Every baby is born with the ability to drink. The one thing the human heart cannot do is receive instruction. Receive Jesus Christ, drink of him, ask him to come in to be in you a fountain of living water, a moment of life. In your response to that invitation, the glorious promise will begin to be fulfilled.

Prayer

Father, what amazing words were these that fell from the lips of the Lord Jesus on that day so long ago in history. We ask forgiveness for the many times we have turned from his voice and heeded the lie around us. Teach us to turn to ourselves alone to him, who can supply the need of our lives and meet the cry of our hearts. Let us find in him the refreshment of living water. In his name, Amen.

* In counting 483 years from this date, allowance must be made of a 4 year error in the date of Christ's birth (4 B.C.) due to the use of a 360 day year by the ancients.

WHEN THE DAM BREAKS

Chapter 4. Matthew 24:21-22

Jesus is now describing to his disciples the end of the age. That end will not be a single climatic event but a chain of events which are the inevitable consequence of forces that have been at work in society throughout the whole course of the world. The scriptures agree that the "desolating sacrilege" our Lord refers to is a man; a man of world prominence who enters the city of Jerusalem and assumes the prerogatives and claims the powers of Deity. So serious is this act that it presents the greatest crisis the world ever will face. In Matthew 24:21,22 Jesus says of it:

"Then there will be great tribulation, such as has not been from the beginning of the world until now, nor ever will be. And if those days had not been shortened, no human being would be saved; but for the sake of the elect those days will be shortened."

Many have found these words hard to believe. They clearly refer to an hour unlike anything else in history. Till recently it has been thought incredible that humanity could ever sink to such an ebb as to bring on a judgment of this character. But remember that political leaders only express ideas which have been lying half hidden in human hearts, waiting only for the right moment to emerge. Hitler did not teach the Nazis to hate the Jews; he only dared express in voluble terms the hatred and resentment of thousands of Germans who were scarcely aware of the terrible passions hidden in their own hearts. When lawlessness takes his position in the temple of God he will only be expressing what long has lain dormant in human hearts.

But though this philosophy is recognizable within us and around us, this act of man's self-deification, expressing world agreement, could never occur today! You ask, "Why not?" Because there are forces at work now which restrain its full development so that it cannot take over as a dominant philosophy of the race until these restraining forces are removed. In Matthew 13:30 he said, in another place "Let both [the wheat and the tares, i.e., good and the evil] grow together until the harvest." In Matthew 13:41 "The harvest is the close of the age." Till that time arrives, good and evil grow together, but the dominant philosophy is good. It is only when the harvest arrives that evil is let loose to dominate the earth.

There's a little jingle that expresses the way most of us feel about right and wrong.

"Our race had an excellent beginning,
But man spoiled his chances by sinning.
We hope that the story,
Will end in God's glory,
But at present the other side's winning!"

It seems to many that evil is triumphant in our day. But every athletic team knows the ease by which the rival team, though seemingly invincible, made up of players ten feet tall. They do everything right, while we do everything wrong. Thus it looks to us that the wrong prevails more often than right, and that we are already in the last day. The dominant thinking of our day, strange as it may sound to our ears, is not evil, but good! Despite widespread injustice and the terrible prevalence of violence and crime, the scales have not been tipped in favor of the wrong. Quite rightly do we sing, "Though the wrong seem oft so strong, God is the right one." The proof of this is that evil must constantly disguise itself as good to be able to survive. Swindlers try to appear respectable, never boldly and blatantly label themselves crooks. Prostitutes want to be called ladies. Tyrants pose as benefactors. Cheats appear truthful. Cheats and misers and perverts, and a whole host of others, hunger after more respectable titles. Only the good is acceptable. Evil must dissemble and appear what it is not, to gain acceptance. This alone is ample proof that against the power of evil so evident today is arrayed an even more massive power for good.

Man often lives in open rebellion today, but he lives also in guilt. He knows that he needs God and in the hour of his need he seeks God. Even communists, who in theory deny the existence of God, in practice often take great pains to disguise their evil so that it look moral and just. Occasionally they even drop expressions which indicate their own deep hunger for God. Evil is under control today, hemmed in by forces for good. The majority view for centuries has been truth and justice; evil in the minority.

but it is controlled. It is forever breaking out as cruelty and violence, in individuals, in homes and in nations, but it is different flavor. The life they possessed, the life of Jesus Christ, made them different. It gave them a different kind of them a different kind of people. They had a different light on their faces, and a different reason for living. They had a different in their lives and a different power than other men.

Because of this, they were salt, arresting corruption. That is the purpose of salt. We use it in meat to stop it from rotteness. So Jesus said they were as salt pervading society, molding human thought, challenging evil, restraining, controlling, limiting, binding, resisting the malignancy of evil in human affairs. It is for this reason that Christians must not isolate themselves from society. They must not attempt to create "Bible Cities," Christian communities set off from the world, away from the stream of life around them. Christians are intended to permeate every level of life. They are salt, but salt is of no value if it remains in the salt shaker!

A Revealed Secret

When Paul wrote to the Thessalonian Christians about the coming of the Lawless One, he said, "You know what is revealed now so that he may be revealed in his time" (2 Thessalonians 2:6). The restraining force was evidently something within themselves. They had only to look into their own lives to see what restrained lawlessness within them. They knew, and that the "desires of the flesh are against the Spirit" (Galatians 5:17). But they were also discovering that "the desires of the flesh...to prevent you from doing what you would." The restrainer of evil is the Holy Spirit within the Church. The glorious secret that Paul calls "Christ in you, the hope of glory," the life of Jesus, imparted by the Holy Spirit, acting against the manifestation of evil.

Again Paul told the Thessalonians: "He who now restrains it will do so until he is out of the way. And then the lawless one will be revealed." All restraints must be removed before what man is without God can be fully revealed. The salt must be taken away to allow the rotteness to be evident. When the restraints are removed man's arrogant pride will soon break out in a rebellion against Deity. Then the sirens will moan, the powers of darkness will be set free, the witches of terror will ride through the night of judgment will begin. "Then there will be great tribulation, such as has not been from the beginning of the world to now, and never will be" (Matthew 24:21).

God's Timetable

When does this removal of the salt of society occur? That is the question that shrieks for an answer now. If we expect a specific date on the calendar we are doomed to disappointment. Jesus continually warned against any attempt to set a date. We do not know the time of this removal in relation to other events at the close of the age. Since Paul says plainly that it will occur "before the Antichrist is revealed-"And then the lawless one will be revealed" (2 Thessalonians 2:8)-we know that this removal occurs between the events recorded in verse 14 of Matthew 24, and those referred to in verse 15. It will be sometime before the sacrilege spoken of by the prophet Daniel stands in the holy place.

Exactly how long before no one knows. Many Bible scholars feel it will be at least three and a half years before (at the end of the seven year period which is Daniel's seventieth week). This would allow some time for the corruption of society, which is held in restraint by the presence of Christian "salt," to spread and entrench itself, and ultimately produce the worldwide blasphemies of the Lawless One when he is revealed in the temple. When all references in Scripture to this event are taken into consideration this seems to be the most likely time for the great removal to occur.

How will it take place? By what means is the Holy Spirit taken "out of the way" so that evil is permitted to run rampant? In the Scriptures the answer comes: the church is suddenly taken out of the world! This does not mean the organized, institutional church, such as it is. It means the true church, consisting of Christians in all denominations (and in no denomination) who possess, and who give birth to the indwelling life of Jesus Christ. As we have already seen, it is through such Christians that the Holy Spirit exercises His restraining work in society. So to remove the Christians is to remove the restraints and take the wraps off evil.

To expect such a fantastic event as this would be nothing but extreme religious fanaticism unless the Bible itself teaches it. Does Jesus say anything about this? The answer is yes! And right here in the Olivet Discourse too! He does not mention when it occurs chronologically (before verse 15), but late in the message he describes it (verses 36-42), and introduces it with the statement that it cannot be tied to any specific date:

"But of that day and hour no one knows, not even the angels of heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only. For as it was in the days of Noah, so will be the coming of the Son of man. For as in those days before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day when Noah entered the ark, and they did not know until the flood came and swept them all away, so will be the coming of the Son of man. Then two men will be in the field; one is taken and one is left. Two women will be grinding at the mill; one is taken and one is left. Watch therefore, for you do not know on what day your Lord is coming."

Two Phases of His "Presence"

When Jesus speaks about his return he is not referring to a single moment of time when he will appear, but his talk that covers a period of time. It will begin with a secret arrival, when he will come like a thief in the night. This will be of his "presence." But that presence will continue throughout all the time of trouble on earth, but behind the scenes invisible to the world. Then, "after the tribulation of those days," he will manifest his presence visibly, appearing in glory.

This invisible presence of Jesus on earth is not something wholly new. During the forty days after his resurrection he was in this condition. He appeared and disappeared among his disciples and they never knew when he was coming or when he was suddenly there, and just as suddenly gone. He was here, but not here. For forty days this manifestation went on until he went into heaven. When he comes again he will resume the same relationship to the believing Jews and Gentiles of that time. He will be caught up to be with him, to join him in that remarkable presence during the terrible days of trouble on earth.

The Church Removed

The removal of the church is described also in other passages. Paul writes to the Thessalonians about that, too in 1 Thessalonians 4:15-18:

"For this we declare to you by the word of the Lord, that we who are alive, who are left until the coming of the Lord, shall not precede those who have fallen asleep. For the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a cry of command, with the archangel's call, and with the sound of the trumpet of God. We who are alive and who are left shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so we shall always be with the Lord. Therefore comfort one another with these words."

This event is called the departure of the church. An older word for it is the "rapture" of the church. As you will note in the Bible about it, it is intended to be a source of comfort to Christians. It is called in Titus 2:13 "our blessed hope." It means that the generation of Christians will not physically die, but will pass directly into a glorified state, as Jesus did on the Mount of Transfiguration before the astonished eyes of Peter, James and John (Matthew 17:2). No wonder one Christian said, "I'm waiting for the undertaker; I'm waiting for the upertaker!"

Don't let your imagination run away with you in trying to conceive what this event will be like. It is highly likely that it will be invisible to the world. It will be unseen and unfelt, with no disturbance of graves and nothing to indicate that anything other than the strange disappearance of thousands. Just as the body of Jesus Christ was raised from the dead and placed in the tomb in which he had resided without any physical manifestation whatever, so this event will take place. The stone was rolled away from Jesus' tomb to let him out; it was rolled away to let the disciples in-so they could see what had happened. They went in and found the grave clothes still lying as though wrapped around a body, but with the body absent, he was convinced that an unusual had occurred.

So this will be a silent event, recognizable only by the unexplained disappearance of many. Paul describes it in 1 Corinthians 15:51,52:

"Lo! I tell you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet. For the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we shall be changed."

The whole point of our Lord's revelation of this fantastic event is, as he puts it, "Watch therefore, for you do not know the day or the hour your Lord is coming." Do not be deceived, do not be misled or swept off your feet by the persuasive lies of unbelief. Do not be distracted by the siren sounds of a deceived society which vainly imagines that all will go on forever as it does.

deterred in your service by the growing power of evil or the dark gloom of deluded men who can switch suddenly from optimism to shuddering despair. The great removal can come at any time. Are you watching?

Prayer

Thank you, Father, for the marvelous power at work in human society, arresting evil, limiting the awful rottenness of human nature, so that it does not manifest itself in full power yet. Help us to be alert, aware, undeceived, available to you, prepared to be as available to us, till the hour strikes when the restraints of grace will be removed. In Jesus' name.

THAT STRANGE PEOPLE, THE JEWS

Chapter Five. Matthew 24:16-20

Perhaps you are now thinking, "If God takes the church out of the world before the great tribulation begins, will no one know God during that time?" To answer that perfectly proper question we must return once again to the words of the disciples on the Mount of Olives. After he has announced the sign of the close of the age as "the desolating sacrilege" prophet Daniel, standing in the holy place," he then adds, in verses 16-20:

"Then let those who are in Judea flee to the mountains; let him who is on the housetop not go down to take what is in his house; and let him who is in the field not turn back to take his mantle. And alas for those who are with child and for those who give suck in those days! Pray that your flight may not be in winter or on a sabbath."

Who are they who must flee so urgently when the last days begin? Who dare not hesitate long enough even to go back to pick up a wrap, but must immediately head for the hills? There is no need to wonder, for the Lord says plainly, "the Jews of Judea." Now Judea is a geographical part of the land of Israel, ancient Palestine. It comprises the hill country surrounding Jerusalem and includes the city as well. It is to the residents of Jerusalem and Judea that this warning is addressed.

Furthermore, the Lord's mention of the Sabbath establishes the fact that these residents of Judea are Jews. He urges their flight will not be in the winter, with its distress of cold, or on the Sabbath, with its travel limitations, for Jews travel only a short distance on a Sabbath day. Later in this passage these Jews are called "the elect" ("for the sake of the days will be shortened"), and this makes clear they are believing Jews, that is, men and women of faith who know Christ as Lord and are prepared to live or die for him.

They are not Christians in the usual sense of that term, referring to those who are members of the church, for where the church there is neither Jew nor Gentile, bond nor free. Jews are not to be distinguished from Gentiles within the church. Distinctions, we are precisely told by the apostle Paul, have been invalidated in the church. The "middle wall of partition" is eliminated; there are no distinctions of background, race or religious training that are recognized within the church of Christ. Furthermore, Christians, we are told, are free from the law and no longer observe special days, special feasts, new moons, and Sabbaths. In his letter to the Colossians the apostle Paul clearly speaks of the fact that the Sabbaths were included in the law which were done away in Christ. But here the Sabbath distinctly will be a restricting factor in the flight of these people. They will be a class of people who cannot be identified with the present day church. They will be Jewish believers in Christ who converted after the removal of the church and before the time of the Great Tribulation.

A Shout and A Voice of Triumph

Now a problem arises. How do these Jews become believers in Christ, since there are no Christians left to preach to them after the removal of the church? In the great description that Paul gives of the departure of the church there is a solution which may help us with this difficulty. He tells the Thessalonians that the Lord Jesus himself will descend from heaven, accompanied by three remarkable sounds. There will be, first, a shout, then the voice of the archangel, and third, the sounding of the trumpet. Why these three?

The shout comes from the Lord himself. As he appears to the church he will call with a loud voice. When he stood before Lazarus he called with a great voice, "Lazarus! Come forth!" It has often been pointed out if he had not said, "Lazarus," be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." The trumpet will sound the beginning of gathering in the church.

Meet Michael

Then what about the archangel's voice? Scripture refers to only one archangel. His name is Michael. He appears a number of times in the Bible and always in connection with the people of Israel. One of the places where he is mentioned is in the twelfth chapter of Daniel, the same prophet to which Jesus referred concerning the desolating sacrilege. In verse 1 Daniel is told:

"At that time shall arise Michael, the great prince who has charge of your people, the Jews. And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never has been since there was a nation till that time [unquestionably, the Great Tribulation] but at that time your people shall be delivered, every one who shall be found written in the book."

It is strongly suggested here that Michael, the great archangel, is responsible for opening the eyes of certain Jews in the time of the departure of the church, and that they will then recognize the Lord Jesus as their true Messiah and become His church.

We may link this passage with one in Revelation chapter 7:2-4, where there is a description of an event that seems very similar, if it is not exactly the same. There the apostle John says:

"Then I saw another angel standing here is a great angel who undertakes a special task connected with Israel. He is not called an archangel, though he well might be Michael. He came down from the rising of the sun, with the seal of the living God, and he called out with a loud voice to the four angels who had been given power to harm earth and sea, saying, 'Do not harm the earth or the sea or the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God upon their foreheads.' And I heard the number of the sealed, a hundred and forty-four thousand sealed, out of every tribe of the sons of Israel."

These 144,000 will clearly be Jews, for the passage goes on to list the twelve tribes of Israel and to declare that 12,000 will be taken from each of the tribes. Further information is given us concerning this special group in Revelation 14:1,3-5:

"Then I looked, and lo, on Mount Zion stood the Lamb, [Jesus] and with him a hundred and forty-four thousand who had his Father's name written on their foreheads. And they sing a new song before the throne and before the four living creatures and the elders. No one could learn that song except the hundred and forty-four thousand who had been redeemed from the earth. These are the ones who have not defiled themselves with women, for they are chaste; it is these who follow the Lamb wherever he goes. These are the redeemed from mankind as first fruits for God and the Lamb, and in their mouth no lie was found, for they are spotless and without blemish."

The same chapter goes on to describe the Great Tribulation as "the hour of his [God's] judgment." Before that hour arrives, 144,000 from the tribes of Israel will be seen with the Lamb on Mount Zion. This is a specific location within the city of Jerusalem. This account confirms the fact that Jesus Christ will be on earth during this time, and will reveal himself to these Jewish disciples, just as he appeared from time to time to his followers during those remarkable forty days after his resurrection.

Evidently these 144,000 Jews are to be turned from unbelief to belief much in the same dramatic way as was the apostle Paul converted on the road to Damascus by the sudden appearance of the risen Lord Jesus Christ. Paul speaks of himself, in Acts 13:15, as "one untimely born," very likely thinking of himself as properly belonging to this special band of Jewish believers. Paul, by the grace of God, was born ahead of time and given the privilege of belonging to the church.

Israel Revisited

Since these 144,000 Jews are in frequent touch with the risen Lord they will be like so many Pauls, proclaiming the mighty Spirit-given power throughout the whole earth. During this time the Lawless One will be moving to consolidate his power and to present himself to the world as God. This appearance of Christ to the 144,000 is the beginning of the fulfillment of the renewed activity with the Jews, long predicted by the Old Testament prophets. Paul also specifically says that despite their wandering following the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem, God will not cast off his people. He will call them back and renew a relationship with them.

In Romans 11 Paul warns that we Gentiles must never assume that God has totally and irrevocably set aside the national promises which he has made to them in the past will be fulfilled. Because of unbelief, Paul says, God scattered them over the earth and opened the door of blessing to all the nations of earth, without distinction. But the Gentiles, too, will fail. The Jews, and then they will be set aside and God will call Israel back into national blessing. That is the work he will begin with the calling of the 144,000. Will anyone believe the message these 144,000 proclaim? If they do, of course, it will probably cost them their lives, since the Lawless One will soon be in full control. The answer to that question is given by the apostle in Revelation 7:9,10,13,14:

First, the midnight hour has not yet arrived. Perhaps we ought to shout with gladness about that. We may be near, the hour of God's grace has not yet run its course. This is not an attempt to frighten anyone into faith, but simply a reminder of what Jesus Christ has said. He came into the world not to condemn it but to save. He is not interested in beating men with an eschatological whip, but he does want them to see life as it is, and themselves as they are: helpless without the aid of powerful forces that can sweep them to inevitable destruction.

So fantastically accurate is this long range prediction of the Lord's, and so compelling in line with the trend of present attitudes, that it becomes a powerful weapon to awaken many from the dream of death in which they are engaged. The

RUSSIA, RELIGION, AND RUIN

Chapter Six. Matthew 7:21-23; Revelation 17:1-6

Are you having difficulty in accepting some of these predicted events as true? Or do you perhaps accept them without yet wonder what your friends would think if you told them you believe all this? There are some who cannot tolerate detail in Scripture. They are quite content to hear prophecy as long as it deals in sweeping generalities and ambiguous figures. They are full of sound and fury, but, to them, signifies nothing. But when Scripture becomes specific and detailed, as it frequently does, they feel distressed and want to retreat to firmer ground—perhaps to the Sermon on the Mount or to some of the Lord's I Ching parables.

To talk of a Second Coming or of The Great Tribulation is, to them, almost as though you were describing an experience of men from a flying saucer! They view the book of Revelation as a kind of eschatological Disneyland, quite unrelated to the space and time with which they are so familiar, or think they are. Instead of giving to prophetic Scripture the careful attention it deserves, they throw up their hands in confusion and turn on Alfred Hitchcock or pick up a who-dunit and try to unravel the mystery instead. Yet it seems obvious that Jesus speaks as freely about the abomination of desolation as he does of forgiveness. Certainly he regards the prophecies of the Old Testament in the most literal terms, adding his own predictions to the unambiguous language. He gives no hint whatever that prophecy in the future will be fulfilled in the past, that is, since the beginning in exact accord with what has been predicted.

Two Powers---Political and Religious

In this chapter we will meet two forces which will be at work during the close of the age, but which are not specifically mentioned by Jesus in the Olivet Discourse. He attempts to give only a general outline of the events of that time, and we must look to the predictive Scriptures to give us the details. Jesus indicates that the Lawless One will be exercising worldwide power during the Great Tribulation, but there is no specific mention of two other powers which are present during part of that time and which are removed before the Antichrist reigns unopposed. One is a political power and the other religious.

The political power is Russia and her satellite nations. The religious rival is the false Church which is left behind when the true church is removed. Already these forces are at work in today's world and form part of "mystery of lawlessness" which is continually growing since the first century. At present there is much good intermingled with the bad but when the true church is removed the bad will quickly become much worse. Dr. Charles Malik, formerly President of the General Assembly of the United Nations, was once asked some, "What can Christians learn from the meteoric rise of world Communism in little more than a few years?" His answer was:

"The most important thing to learn is that we are still living as the Germans say 'zwischen den zeiten' (between the times) when the forces can quickly soar very high and can take possession of the world in very short order. If it isn't Communism it will be something else: this battle between Christ and the devil is an eternal thing until Christ comes again. Christians cannot watch too closely. We must be ready at all times to watch day and night. We don't know when he is coming again. The greatest lesson we can learn is that there is no security in the times, no security whatever." *

The Bible deals with the downfall of Russia in very short order. When you consider the amount of space that Scripture gives to the truly important in God's sight, it is remarkable that the threat to the world and to God's cause from atheistic Russia is dealt with so briefly. The story is contained largely in two chapters in the Book of Ezekiel, chapters 38 and 39. These are supplemented by references in Daniel 11, Joel 2 and Isaiah 10. Read these at your leisure for they help fill in the story of the great power of the Lawless One and her satellites.

The prophet Ezekiel, in 38:1,2 identifies a great power which is coming from the north against the land of Israel. These are the words of the LORD:

"The word of the LORD came to me: 'Son of man, set your face toward Gog, of the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him.'"

The land of Magog, which is mentioned also in Genesis 10, is a general term for an undefined area centering around the Black Sea. But the term "chief prince" is even more specific. In Hebrew it is actually "the prince of Rosh" and there is much evidence that the name Russia is derived from that word, Rosh. Scholars also identify Meshech and Tubal with the ancient capitals of Russia in Siberia, namely Moscow and Tobolsk.

Through Ezekiel, in verses 8, 9, God delivers the following message to the prince of Rosh:

"After many days you will be mustered; in the latter years you will go against the land that is restored from war, the land where people were gathered from many nations upon the mountains of Israel, which had been a continual waste. You will advance, coming on like a storm, you will be like a cloud covering the land, you will be with all your hordes, and many peoples with you."

It would be fascinating to trace through in detail the full revelation of Scripture concerning this coming invasion of Israel. From the prophet Joel that Jerusalem will be taken and Zechariah, in his 14th chapter, gives us the details of this. Daniel (that the northern army will sweep down into Egypt and North Africa and there, having conquered these areas, the coming king calls him the "king of the north") will hear tidings out of the east and north that will trouble him and he will return to Israel. There on the mountains of Judea, the very same mountains where Jesus and his disciples walked, he is to be overthrown and destroyed. Ezekiel 38:22, 23.

"With pestilence and bloodshed I will enter into judgment with him; and I will rain upon him and his hordes and the many peoples that are with him, torrential rains and hailstones, fire and brimstone. So I will show my greatness and my holiness and make myself known in the eyes of many nations. Then they will know that I am the LORD."

It is apparent from the description that God himself will assume the prerogative of dealing with the Russian threat. Whether it involve nuclear warfare, or be purely a natural disaster, is difficult to determine. At any rate it is quite clear that the coming king, governed from Moscow. The general consensus of biblical scholars would date this destruction of Russia some time during the half of Daniel's seventieth week, and before the onset of the Great Tribulation.

Religious Babylon

The one roadblock to power that will remain before the Lawless One can completely have his way with the world will be the religious monolith which is left in control of religious affairs after the true church has been removed. The apostle John gives a symbolic picture of this church in Revelation 17:

"Then one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls came and said to me, 'Come, I will show you the judgment of the great harlot who is seated upon many waters, with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and with the wine of whose fornication the dwellers on earth have drunk.' And he carried me away in the Spirit into a wilderness, and I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast which was full of blasphemous names, and it had seven heads and ten horns. The woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet, bedecked with gold and jewels and pearls, holding in her hand a golden cup full of abominations and the impurities of her fornication; and on her forehead was written a name of mystery: 'Babylon the great, mother of harlots and of earth's abominations.' And I saw the woman, drunk with the blood of the saints and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

The ten-horned beast which this woman is seen riding is a symbolic description of the Lawless One who is the head of the hierarchy of the western world. The woman here is the false church and she is seen riding the beast, that is, in some way in control over the Lawless One.

The name of this woman is "Mystery Babylon the Great." It indicates that false Christianity is in some way linked with the city Babylon. Since Babylon is the city that grew up around the tower of Babel, as described in Genesis 11, we have a strong hint of what the error of Babylonianism is. The tower of Babel was the earliest attempt of man to gain power through the exercise of religious authority. Thus there originated in the great city by the Euphrates a false religion which masqueraded as the true one and throughout all history has been infiltrating all religious systems to deceive and delude men. Its character has always been the same: love of power and prestige, obtained by exercising religious authority.

Babylonianism is not confined to any one group or ecclesiastical organization today. Like the true church, the false is everywhere, permeating everything. But there is this difference: the true church is an organism, a living body, made up of people who share the same life, the life of Jesus. The false church is an organization and therefore lays much stress on external things. Wherever you find those who bow to the Lordship of Jesus Christ and love and obey him, there you have the true church. Wherever you find those who, though outwardly religious, love self and hunger after status, prestige, and the world's acclaim, there you have the false church, Babylon the Great.

It is obvious that ecclesiastical merger is the spirit of the day. Almost monthly we read of some new merger of churches or organizations. It appears as though the church has been infected with the Rotary Club spirit, for Rotarians love to say, "The more we get together the happier we'll be." Despite this external merging and blending of organizations it will be impossible to separate the true church from the false until God himself will remove the true and leave the false.

Many Christians are asking, "What shall we do about this growing octopus of churches? Should we withdraw and form a separate, purified group, where unbelief is excluded and only true Christians are admitted?" That is utterly impossible. Jesus specifically, "Let [the wheat and the tares] grow together until the harvest." The World Council of Churches, the Roman Catholic Church, the various independent bodies, all have genuine Christians in their membership, as well as those who are Babylonian in heart. No man, or group of men, possesses the wisdom to distinguish between the true and the false. Until God makes it clear, it is necessary for each individual to judge his own heart.

Marks of Counterfeit Christianity

But can you know which side you are on? Yes! The Bible indicates that there are certain attitudes which clearly mark the counterfeit. Let's take a look at three incisive passages that will unveil the mark of the counterfeit. The first is from Philippians 3:18-19:

"For many, of whom I have often told you and now tell you even with tears, live as enemies of the cross of Christ. Their end is destruction, their god is the belly, and they glory in their shame, with minds set on earthly things."

One clear mark of the false is a set of wrong values. The most important thing in life to anyone is what he regards as his god. In this verse the god is the belly. These people are not concerned about the work of the Lord, the extension of the "good news" to the needy, meeting the needs of heart-sick, hungry, or deluded people. To them the most important issues are, "What shall I eat and drink, and with what shall I be clothed." Their glory is their shame. They glory in what really ought to be the source of their shame: a man boasting that he has bad breath. "Hallelujah, I've got halitosis!" They should be ashamed of their pride, their prejudice, and their pettiness, but instead they boast of these things and even claim they are "Christian" attitudes.

Also, they mind "earthly things." They have no vision beyond what can be seen. The earthly things are not wrong but they are not good enough. The ultimate decisions of life are not to be based on immediate issues-making money, gaining or losing status, or pleasing others-but on the absolute values which God declares. Jesus said "Seek first his [God's] kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things shall be yours as well." But those who mind earthly things are always ready to forget the Lord's words when their interests are at stake. Another passage that marks a counterfeit Christian is Matthew 7:21-23:

"Not everyone who says to me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of my Father who is in heaven. On that day many will say to me, 'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in your name, and cast out demons in your name, and do mighty works in your name?' And then will I declare to them, 'I never knew you; depart from me, you evil-doers.'"

These are people characterized by a false sense of ministry. They are certain what they have done will win commendation from God, but they are terribly mistaken. What they have done seems quite worthy: teaching, healing, and helping. "Did we not prophesy in your name?" That is the ministry of teaching and it is apparently Christian teaching, for it is done in the name of Christ. "Did we not cast out demons?" That is the ministry of healing, of counseling and delivering from oppressive powers. "Did we not...do mighty works?" It includes such deeds as establishing schools, building hospitals, lifting literary standards and many other activities which the world would recognize as "mighty works."

But there is one thing wrong. It is all accomplished for the sake of self. It is an attempt to gain prestige and favor from men; therefore it is Babylonianism. There has been no new beginning, no new birth in Jesus Christ. It is perfectly sincere, earnest, even completely dedicated, but it is all directed at the deadly magnifying of self which God completely set aside.

One additional passage from the lips of Jesus completes the trilogy of the counterfeit. This one is found in Revelation

"I know your works: you are neither cold nor hot. Would that you were cold or hot! So, because you are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew you out of my mouth. For you say, I am rich, I have prospered, and I need nothing; not knowing that you are wretched, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked."

This group suffers from a false sense of power. They think they are Christians and call themselves Christians. They even see themselves as an especially powerful church and they reckon their power from three apparent sources. The first of them is money. "Money talks," they say. "Money is power." But money cannot change hearts, or break evil habits, or open deluded eyes. To rely on money these people can never do anything more than the nearest bank or government agency can do.

Furthermore, they say, "I have prospered;" that is, increased in numbers. Is this not the standard for measuring power today? "We have the largest church in town." "Our congregation is made up of the finest people and all the top leaders." "The votes we can sway we can do almost anything." One hears this kind of talk on every side today, but it is all a delusion. As a third source of power they demonstrate a tremendous sense of confidence. "We have need of nothing," they say. "We have it takes to do whatever needs to be done." That is the spirit of Babylonianism. In the face of this remarkable esprit de corps "[You do not know] that you are wretched, pitiable, poor, blind and naked."

The ultimate fate of this false church is revealed to us by John in Revelation 17:15-17:

"And he said to me, 'The waters that you saw, where the harlot is seated, are the peoples and multitudes of nations and tongues. And the ten horns that you saw, they and the beast will hate the harlot; they will make her desolate and naked, and devour her flesh and burn her up with fire, for God has put it into their hearts to carry out his purpose by being of one mind and giving over their royal power to the beast, until the word of God shall be fulfilled.'"

Shorn of its real power by the removal of the true Christians, the whole ecclesiastical structure becomes nothing but a mockery. Though it still attempts to ride the beast, and thus to continue the moral control and political influence it once exercised, yet this soon becomes no longer possible. Morality without faith is empty and vain and it cannot long survive. When the hypocrisy of this false church becomes no longer concealable the nations will turn on it like wild pigs on a whole hypocritical structure to the ground.

There was an historical foreview of this in the days of the French Revolution. Then during the revolt against religion, churches were torn down or turned into market places, altars were violated, prostitutes were invested as priests, and religious teachers were to scorn. So also the nations will hate the harlot and make her desolate and naked, devouring her flesh and burning her. The Lawless One will be free to carry out his cruel will upon all the peoples of earth.

If in searching your own heart you find continual manifestation of self-centeredness, of concern for yourself and lack of concern for others, of bitterness or resentment all these mark the path of unbelief. Though you may have received the Lord Jesus Christ you are not yet living the life he came to give you. Ask him to deal with the pride and love of position within you and let your heart flame with his life, love, grace, glory and joy. If life is dull and meaningless to you, uncertain and filled with darkness somewhere you've failed to take what he came to give.

He did not come to give you darkness, dullness and darkness. He came to give life-abundant life; the kind that he himself lived in the days of his flesh. If he has entered your heart then expect him to live that kind of life in you, for that is what the Christian life is all about: of him being all that he is, in you! Nothing less than this is true Christianity.

Prayer

Thank you, Heavenly Surgeon, for the sharp knife of your Word which pierces into the inner parts of our lives and cuts out cancerous growths of pride and self-sufficiency. Thank you also for the life of the Lord Jesus which is given to us by your grace. Help us to know how to live in continual expectation of his activity in us, that we may be real, and not counterfeit, Christians. In his name, Amen.

The Secret Presence

Chapter Seven. Matthew 24:23-38

Do you know the first question ever asked in the New Testament? It was asked by Wise Men who came out of the East saying, "Where is he who has been born king of the Jews?" A little later Herod the king asked the same question of the Jews saying, "Where (is the Christ) to be born?" They told him, "In Bethlehem of Judea." Thus the New Testament opens with a secret question: "Where is he?"

As Jesus stands on the Mount of Olives with his disciples and previews for them the remarkable period to come which will close the age, he indicates that during that time men will still be asking, "Where is the Christ?" But then, he says, "Do not be deceived by a secret question; be careful of it! In Matthew 24:23-28, he says:

"Then if any one says to you, 'Lo, here is the Christ!' or 'There he is,' do not believe it. For false Christs and false prophets will arise and show great signs and wonders, so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect. I say to you, Lo, I have told you beforehand. So, if they say to you, 'Lo, he is in the wilderness,' do not go out; if they say, 'Lo, he is in the inner rooms,' do not believe it. For as the lightning comes from the east and shines as far as the west, so will be the coming of the Son of man. Wherever the body is, there the eagles will be gathered together."

Do not miss the time word with which Jesus opens this section, "Then if any one says to you," etc. "Then" clearly refers to the time of the Great Tribulation which he has briefly but terribly described with the words, "if those days had not been shortened, no man would be saved." As we have seen, this is the last three and one-half years of Daniel's predicted seventieth week, a terrible time of persecution and judgment the Lord Jesus will support and sustain his own by appearing to them frequently in various places. These appearances will certainly be made to the 144,000 in their world wide ministry, and perhaps also to a "multitude" of Gentile believers who will come out of the Great Tribulation.

As a result of this rather unusual state of affairs rumors will apparently spread like wildfire that Jesus Christ is somewhere.

In John 7:11, 32-36 Jesus himself predicted that a situation like this that would occur during the forty day period after his resurrection.

"The Jews were looking for him at the feast, and saying, 'Where is he?' the question again! A little further on John says: 'The Pharisees heard the crowd thus muttering about him, and the chief priests and Pharisees sent officers to arrest him. Jesus then said, 'I shall be with you a little longer, and then I go to him who sends me, and you will seek me and you will not find me; where I am you cannot come.' The Jews said to one another, 'What does this man intend to go that we shall not find him? Does he intend to go to the Dispersion among the Greeks and teach the Greeks? What does he mean by saying, "You will seek me and you will not find me," and "where I am you cannot come"?'"

To these Jews Jesus was nothing but a tub-thumping, rabble-raising, troublemaker from Nazareth and they intended to kill him as quickly as possible. Jesus knew this and knew that they would succeed in their plans. But now he puzzled them by telling them that after they had done their worst, they would look for him but would not be able to find him. That could have been true during his forty-day post-resurrection ministry. After he ascended into the heavens they did not look for him. They were then declaring throughout Jerusalem that he had gone to the Father. But during that forty-day period there must have been disquieting rumors, which came to the authorities' ears, that Christ was still somewhere around.

When the soldiers came from the grave of Jesus with the report that he had risen from the dead, they had to be bribed. The disciples had come and stolen his body away, and thus to quiet that rumor. But soon other rumors were buzzing. Myriads of appearances of Jesus to his disciples were reported and the authorities must have sent other search parties to try to find him. Jesus had predicted, they searched for him but they could not find him. They could never understand the reason, but Jesus had said, "Where I am going you cannot come." In the new relationship to his own into which he had entered, it was impossible for them to intrude.

During that forty-day period the disciples of Jesus were what we might call "Pre-church Christians." They believed in Jesus, but were not yet members of the church, for the church was not formed until the day of Pentecost when the Holy Spirit came. During the close of the age, the disciples (or as Jesus calls them "the elect") will be what we might call "Post-church Christians." The church has been removed from the world, at least from any visible participation in world affairs. Since we know that the church will be given glorified bodies like their Lord's (and Paul says that, once removed from this life, the church will be forever "with the Lord"), it seems highly likely that church Christians will join the Lord Jesus in this ministry behind the scenes during the tribulation. They will be like Moses and Elijah who appeared with the transfigured Christ on the Mount. The picture then is clear. Jesus will return to the church and take the members into a new relationship with him. Then he, with them, will remain throughout the "end times" period, appearing only to those whose hearts are ready to believe in him. Rumors of his presence will continually be spread, so that men will be saying in that day as they said during the forty-day period, "Where is he?" Authorities will search for him, but be unable to find him, but false prophets will claim to know where he is.

Masters of Deceit

Part of the tribulation of the end times will be a fresh and powerful campaign of deceit which will break out against the church. Men will be tempted to believe in Jesus. Just as the Lord foresaw and described the great forces of deceit which would be at work at the close of the age, so he also described the Great Tribulation. Their first element will be the presence of authoritative persons who will say, "False Christs and false prophets will arise" (Matthew 24:24). No program of falsehood among men ever existed without a powerful leader. The human heart inveterately loves a good showman. Men tend easily to follow those who speak with authority and who manifest drive and dash in his personalities. And there is no road to error quite so compelling as a religious one. The church is the idea that more people are misled religiously than any other way. Let a blatant atheist utter an attack against Christ, and the church is greatly disturbed or changed. But let a bishop of the church, dressed in religious garb and using pious language say something, and immediately it is discussed and openly or secretly admired all over the world.

So false Christs shall arise, taking full advantage of the superstitious expectancy of the times, for as the Lord said in another place, "Men [will be] fainting with fear and with foreboding of what is coming in the world." They will come with a display of signs and wonders, misleading many, and playing ultimately into the hands of the Lawless One.

Not only will there be false Christs, but also false prophets. We have already seen that this can have a secular sense. The philosophers, the philosophers, professors, scientists; clever men of great intelligence who are listened to with respect. While the church is yet on earth it acts as salt, pervading every section of life, and there are men of true faith found everywhere. But in that day there will no longer be room for the gospel of the supernatural. There will be no place among intellectuals for what Paul calls a "secret and hidden wisdom of God," which none of the princes of this world for had they known it, they would never "have crucified the Lord of Glory" (1 Corinthians 2:7, 8).

Since there will no longer be a place among the leaders of the world for those who live by faith, there will arise men of great intellectual capacity and ability who will become the instruments of error-false prophets-who will convince millions that the Antichrist is the only reasonable basis for life.

Augmenting the pull of masterful personalities in the last days, will be the power of persuasive propaganda. As we have seen, powerful rumors of the mysterious presence of Jesus Christ will sweep the nations. There will be many who will claim to have authoritative information to where he may be found. They will offer themselves as privileged companion of Christ, claiming that alone may be trusted to lead the seeker to him.

Lest this seem unbelievable, let me share a personal experience which occurred a few years ago. I was invited to meet a certain teacher in a private home. He told me without much preamble, "Christ has already returned to earth and I happen to know where he is. If you are really interested in preaching the truth, I can tell you how to get in on this." I was not deeply impressed, and said to him, "Where is he, then, since you know?"

"Oh, he is in a special place in the desert, here in California," he answered. "I have seen him many times and others thousands of times. Only we know where he is."

To learn what he would say, I turned to this very passage of Scripture and read these words to him: "If [a man says] to you, 'I have seen him in the wilderness,' do not... believe [him]" (Matthew 24:26)."

"Oh," he said, "Jesus didn't mean our group!"

Well, that is the crack-pot approach to prophecy. But the false Christs and false prophets and their followers in the last days will do the same thing. They will relate their offer to various longings of the heart. To some who have grown tired of the rat race, are especially fed up with city living, they will say: "Lo, he is in the wilderness." They will suggest that the nature of the message is a call to return to nature, to simplify life and get back to the primitive struggle of wrestling with the elements. Others will make appeal to the lust for knowledge. They will say that the Christ can only be found in the race to unlock the secrets of the universe. The answer will be found in the inner rooms of knowledge. When we know what we are and who we are, and how to operate, then we will be able to find the mysterious presence of the Messiah. He is in the inner rooms, if anywhere.

Does this sound familiar? In the end of the age it will not be necessary to invent any new ideas. It will only be necessary to revive the ones that are already current in life.

As a final clincher, Jesus says that these false leaders will "...show great signs and wonders, so as to lead stray, if possible, even the elect."

Even this is nothing new. The man on the street today is so impressed by the wonders science has brought about that he can believe anything is possible.

When the first H-bomb was exploded in the Pacific one reporter described the blast as, "White and hot, like the flash of an electrical circuit. It turned almost instantly to bright bilious green, a color so unexpected that watchers on the beach saw green fingers of light poked out through the clouds. From the center of the blast a red glow began expanding upward, a familiar orange of the tropical sunset, but a deep solid red, and the people afterwards groped for words to describe it. The fire aloft and boiled into the sky. A quarter moon-some people thought it was the fire-ball-showed through occasionally and its face glowed, not pale, but a rich, strange yellow."

Another reporter on the island of Samoa reported seeing a rainbow with colored lights dancing. "Later," he said, "the rainbow left it left something behind that I had never felt with rainbows-elation, awe, and an unearthly fright." When man can come to be so frightful as that, who is not ready to listen? What a witches' brew of wonders will be released when the "mystery of iniquity" in its final form makes a last, final, desperate effort to capture men's minds and sweep them over the precipice of deceit to destruction.

The False - Now the True

In contrast to the false propaganda of the last days, in Matthew 24:27,28 Jesus unveils the true method for locating his presence. To do so he uses a parable from nature and a proverb from life: "For as the lightning comes from the east and flashes as far as the west, so will be the coming of the Son of man. Wherever the body is, there the eagles will be gathered together."

The word the Lord uses for "coming" here is the now familiar "parousia." It is quite a different word than he uses a few verses on when he speaks of "the Son of man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." It is easy to confuse the two comings because of his reference to lightning in verse 27. Since lightning is a form of power and glory, many feel that the "coming" is as a symbol of his coming in glory. But note carefully what he says.

Lightning flashes in the east, but the effect of it is seen all over the sky. Yet the flash itself does not involve the whole of the heavens from east to west. When he uses the symbol of lightning, therefore, he is not describing a universal manifestation of his glory, but the universal effect of his presence behind the scenes. Like lightning flashes he will be in different places, at all different times, but the effect of those appearances will be felt throughout the earth.

Furthermore, lightning is sovereign, unpredictable, uncontrollable. So will be the presence, the parousia, of the Son of man. He will appear and disappear at will. Whenever there is need for him he will be there, just as he was during the post-resurrection appearances. There will be no need to search for him for he cannot be found that way. There will be no need to look for him in the wilderness or in the inner rooms, for he will come whenever and wherever he finds a heart ready to know him. In the passage parallel to Matthew 24:27,28 Jesus says, "For as the lightning flashes and lights up the sky from one side to the other, so will the Son of man be in the clouds of heaven on 'that day'" used in that sense always refers to a period of time, not a sudden, climactic event.

Then, using a common proverb of the day, Jesus indicates the proper way to find him in that day,

"Wherever the body is, there the eagles will be gathered together." Rather than eagles, the margin gives the proper word, vultures: "there the vultures will be gathered together."

When I was a boy in a remote high school in Montana, we were having basketball practice one night. At the close of the period the coach called one of the team members aside. I watched him go to the other side of the room. The boy was mine and came from a rather poor family who were trying to eke out a living on a ranch about ten miles north of town. As the lad's face while the coach was talking to him, I saw it blanch and after a bit the boy walked off with his head down. He came over to us and said, "I just gave Joe some bad news. His dad has been found dead." Then he told us how he was

One of the neighbors owned a ranch about four or five miles away, but separated from Joe's home by a deep canyon. I looked over and noticed that there was no smoke rising from the ranch house, so he saddled a horse and rode over. When he reached the silent cabin and found no one around, he began to wonder if anything had happened. As he looked about he saw in the

The Power And The Glory

Chapter Eight. Matthew 24:29-31

The most dramatic event in all history will be the visible appearing of Jesus Christ. No one can possibly miss it when he himself describes it for us in Matthew 24:29-31:

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens will be shaken; then will appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then all the tribes of the earth will mourn, and they will see the Son of man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory; and he will send out his angels with a trumpet call, and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

This is the most prophesied event in the Bible. The Old Testament contains many references to it, and it has been essential to the New Testament one verse out of ten refers to this coming of Jesus Christ. If all the references to this event were taken from the Old Testament, you find it unintelligible in many parts.

From "Presence" to Unveiling

But we must be careful to understand it in relation to the parousia, the presence of Jesus, which has been going on since he was taken out of the restrictions of time before the end of the age began. This flaming advent is part of the parousia that marks the end of the secret presence. It is the outshining of his presence before the eyes of the whole world. What was secret to his own during the dark days of the tribulation, he now will be openly before the whole world. He will especially appear to the Lawless One. Paul says, "The Lord Jesus will slay him with the breath of his mouth and destroy him by his appearing and his coming" (2 Thessalonians 2:8).

That last phrase, "his appearing and his coming," is literally, "the epiphany of his parousia." Epiphany is a word that means unveiling, or outshining. Taken in that sense, Paul is calling this dramatic appearance of Jesus Christ, "the unveiling of his parousia." It is the startling climax of the whole period which Jesus calls "the close of the age."

The final crashing crescendo of civilization's last hour will be accomplished in three sweeping movements. Each of these will be broad strokes by Jesus. The first is a violent activity in nature:

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens will be shaken."

Notice that the Lord Jesus distinctly separates this event from the Great Tribulation. The tribulation will be essential manifestation of the naked brutality of man, the exhibition of the cruelty and unbelievable violence of the human heart without grace. It is described for us in detail in the book of the Revelation, especially in the judgments of the seals and the trumpets, a time when the horrors of Nazi persecution, reflected in the gas chambers of Buchenwald and Dachau, will be repeated on earth; a time when violence stalks the streets, and the nuclear witches of terror scream through the skies. As Jesus speaks of unprecedented human evil, of terrible slaughter and human suffering.

But immediately following this tribulation terrifying signs appear in the heavens. The phrase, "the powers of the heavens will be shaken," suggests severe gravitational disturbance of the solar system. This in turn would produce phenomenal effects. Showers of meteors will flash through the darkening skies. Earthquakes cause the land to heave and shake, and great waves will batter the coasts. Luke reports that, "men [will be] fainting with fear," and there will be great "distress of nations in perplexity because of the sea and the waves." Volcanoes erupt, spouting out streams of lava and vast clouds of cinder and ash which obscure the moon. The sun is darkened and the moon reddens and is finally unable to shine at all.

Unbelievable as all this may sound to our ears, nevertheless, it very likely does not include anything which has not happened within the memory of mankind! The Russian scientist, Immanuel Velikovsky *, has amassed a tremendous amount of evidence from many sources indicating, quite apart from any religious connotation, that in the past there have occurred similar times of volcanic eruption, seismic activity, and disturbances in the solar system. It is the conviction of this scientist that the plagues of the time of the Exodus under Moses were part of a world wide upheaval in nature caused by a comet closely approaching earth. Its gravity drew the waters of the sea into huge tidal waves and caused volcanoes to disgorge great flows of lava which covered the mountain ranges of earth. The comet then went on to become the planet Venus, which often appears in our sky as a bright star.

These theories are disparaged in some scientific circles, but all agree that Velikovsky has gathered together and enormous amount of evidence for strange happenings in the past. The discoveries of the rocket "Voyager" on its trip to Venus helped to confirm the claims of Velikovsky concerning the nature of this planet and its origin, and there is now much scientific interest in Venus.

Even in relatively modern times there are many unexplained celestial phenomena. By no means should we assume that we can explain all that has taken place in even the immediate past. In one of his public speeches while president, John F. Kennedy mentioned the unexplained Dark Day which occurred in the month of May, 1780, when all of New England was for many days plunged into total darkness. No one has ever been able to explain it, but it remains a fact of history. From time to time there is report the falling to earth in various places of great chunks of ice weighing sometimes four to five hundred pounds. No one knows their origin.

Voices from the Past

To face honestly the unresolved mysteries of the past is to realize how readily these words of Jesus can be fulfilled. It is Jesus who tells us of these earth traumas, but other prophets from the Old Testament have foretold them. For instance, Jeremiah said, "And I will give portents in the heavens and on the earth, blood and fire and columns of smoke. The sun shall be turned to black and the moon to blood, before the great and terrible day of the LORD comes."

Isaiah also describes the same event, using very similar language in 13:9, 10:

"Behold, the day of the LORD comes, cruel, with wrath and fierce anger, to make the earth a desolation and to destroy its sinners from it. For the stars of the heavens and their constellations will not give their light, the sun will be dark at its rising and the moon will not shed its light."

And in Revelation 6:12-14, the apostle John describes it in very vivid terms.

"When he opened the sixth seal, I looked, and behold, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth, the full moon became like blood, and the stars of the sky fell to the earth as the fig tree sheds its winter fruit when shaken by a gale; the sky vanished like a scroll that is rolled up, and every mountain and island was removed from its place."

All these passages confirm the words of Jesus that some celestial force will create these tremendous events upon earth to introduce the final act in the drama of civilization as we know it.

The Unveiling of Christ

This violent upheaval in nature is followed immediately by the sign of the Son of man in heaven and the visible appearance of Christ to all the earth:

"Then will appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then all the tribes of earth will mourn, and they will see the Son of man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

As we have already noted, this is the outshining of his glory; the sudden unveiling of his presence. It is often called the "second coming," though in truth that term covers the whole period of Christ's secret presence. But it will be the second time that the world will see Jesus Christ. The last time it saw him was on a bloody cross, writhing in the agonies of death, apparently a shameful and glorious death, no power and no success. But when it sees him again it will see him coming triumphant in power and glory.

The event will be preceded by the appearance of "the sign of the Son of man" in the heavens. The disciples had asked beginning of this discourse: "What will be the sign of your coming?" This question he now answers, though not as clearly as they or we might have liked.

When the disciples asked the question they did not mean, as we frequently take it, "What is the sign that will mark your coming?" Inevitably we associate signs with schedules. But the disciples knew better than that. They meant, "What is the sign that will reveal the meaning of your coming?" This is always the purpose of signs in Scripture. That sign, Jesus now says, is the shining cloud in the sky just before he is made visible.

Let us not miss the fact that he links this sign with the statement, "then all the tribes of the earth will mourn." We will see more fully a bit later, but from other Scripture it appears that he means the tribes of Israel. Since this sign is thus linked, it strongly suggests that the sign will consist of the reappearance of the cloud of glory which accompanied the nation of Israel as it journeyed through the wilderness for forty years. It was called the Shekinah, and was the sign of God's presence with His people. Later, when the Temple was built and Solomon dedicated it to God, the Shekinah glory came down and took rest in the Temple upon the Ark of the Covenant as the sign that God was dwelling with His people.

This shining cloud may well be what Jesus himself is referring to when he says, "They will see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven." There is an obvious reference to this same event in Revelation 1:7. There John says: "Behold, he is coming with the clouds, and every eye will see him, every one who pierced him; and all tribes of the earth will wail on account of him." The clouds can simply refer to the atmospheric clouds, but the repeated emphasis seems suggestive of more. When Jesus thus speaks of the close of the age, but it will also be the opening event of a new age, and the supreme characteristic of that new age is that God dwells with His people. In Revelation 21:3, John describes it, "Behold, the dwelling of God is with men. He will dwell with them and be with them and be their God and will himself be with them and be with them." Since the Shekinah is the sign of God's presence with man, it is fitting that it should reappear as the sign that explains the meaning of Christ's coming. He comes that he may be, as the Old Testament prophets whispered, "Immanuel, God with us."

God With Us---In Power

The shining cloud will be followed by the dramatic appearance of Jesus Christ himself. It is not a silent appearing, nor does it take place in a corner, but a bold, triumphant revelation. As we have seen, John declares that every eye shall see him. In Thessalonians 1:7,8, Paul speaks of a time: "When the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, inflicting vengeance upon those who do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus." The present age, when God allows man to rule the earth, is brought to an end and God now reasserts his right to rule over all the earth. It is described in striking language in Revelation 11:15: "Then the seventh angel blew his trumpet, and there were loud voices in heaven, saying, 'The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.'"

The reference of Jesus to his coming "with power and great glory" reminds us immediately of the closing words of the Lord's Prayer. How many times have you prayed, "For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory?" That prayer reflects the anticipation of the people, through all the dark centuries, of the eventual coming of that flaming hope when the power and the glory of the earth will be in the hands of the One to whom it rightfully belongs.

It was to try to prevent this that the Tempter met Jesus in the wilderness in the beginning of his ministry and tempted him three times. The final temptation was to take him to a high mountain and show him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment. There the devil said, "All these will I give you, if you will fall down and worship me." In effect he was saying, "Mine is the power, and the glory." And he was right!-for the moment. Jesus did not rebuke him for some preposterous claim, but he did rebuke him for his justification. Rather he answered him, using the only weapon that is available to a believer in any hour of darkness or temptation, the unchangeable word of God. He said to him: "It is written, 'You shalt worship the Lord your God and him only shalt thou worship.'"

With those words Jesus set aside the temptation to take a seeming short-cut to the goal for which he came. Instead he went through the darkness of the cross, the agony and the blood of death, in order that he might make possible the hour he is describing. The kingdom will come to take the kingdoms of the world, in power and great glory.

When Israel Mourns

The unveiling of Jesus as Lord of lords and King of kings will also accomplish certain immediate events. The first will be the mourning of the nation Israel. As we have already noted, the Lord's reference to "all the tribes of the earth will mourn" tribes of Indians, but tribes of Jews. In the verse from Revelation already quoted, John says, "All tribes of the earth will account of him." It will be the mourning of Israel in her hour of national sorrow.

Their mourning will be in direct fulfillment of the prophecy of Zechariah 12: 10,11: "And I will pour out on the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem a spirit of compassion and supplication, so that, when they look on him whom they have pierced, they shall mourn for him, as one mourns for an only child, and weep bitterly over him, as one weeps over a first-born. On that day the mourning in Jerusalem will be as great as the mourning for Hadadrimmon in the plain of Megiddo."

Why will they mourn? Because they will be looking on him whom they have pierced. To their utter astonishment they will see that the One who appears in power and great glory bears in his hands the marks of nails and in his side the wound of a spear. Of course, all the world is guilty of piercing the Son of God, but the Jews were particular instruments in that respect. Perhaps the very words of their mourning are recorded for us in a well-known passage from the prophet Isaiah. In that day they shall look on him whom they have pierced, they will say to each other:

"Who has believed what we have heard? And to whom has the arm of the Lord been revealed? For he grew up before him like a young plant, and like a root out of dry ground; he had no form or comeliness that we should look at him, and no beauty that we should desire him. He was despised and rejected by men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; and as one from whom men hide their faces he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we esteemed him stricken, smitten by God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; upon him was chastisement that made us whole, and with his stripes we are healed."

They will recognize in that day that the one whom their fathers, in ignorance and blindness, had crucified was the one who died for them and given himself for their sins. They will cry out in sadness and heartache over the long years of rejection that culminated in the crucifixion.

Righteousness Triumphs---At Last!

But that is not all that will happen to Israel when Jesus appears in power and glory. He also adds, concerning himself, "I will send out his angels with a loud trumpet call, and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Once again we do not need to be in doubt as to who these elect are. Isaiah 11:11, 12 helps us here:

"In that day [the context makes clear it is the end of the age] the Lord will extend his hand yet a second time to recover the remnant which is left of his people, from Assyria, from Egypt, from Pathros, from Ethiopia, from Elam, from Shinar, from Hamath, and from the coastlands of the sea. He will raise an ensign for the nations, and will assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

Jeremiah also confirms the same promise. The whole thirty-first chapter of Jeremiah should be read to note the beauty and the lilted gladness of its promise. But in verses 7,8 he says:

"...the LORD has saved his people, the remnant of Israel.' Behold, I will bring them from the north country and gather them from the farthest parts of the earth, among them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her who is in travail, together; a great company, they shall return here."

Certainly this gathering will include the 144,000. Perhaps also it will include as many as are left alive of the "great multitude" of Gentiles who believe in Jesus because of the testimony of the remnant of Israel. Jesus himself, in his description of the gathering given in the parables of Matthew 13, suggests that others are included. He says, in verses 40-43:

"Just as the weeds are gathered and burned with fire, so will it be at the close of the age. The Son of man will send his angels, and they will gather out of his kingdom all causes of sin and all evildoers, and throw them into the furnace of fire; there men will weep and gnash their teeth. Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Many have confused this gathering by the angels with the removal of the church, described by Paul in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18. Paul said here of gathering the elect into heaven, but rather, as ordinary living persons, they are gathered into an earthly kingdom. There is no resurrection of the dead mentioned at all, while in the case of the removal of the church, this is a primary emphasis.

Furthermore, when the church is removed there is no suggestion that evil men are judged, but in the passage quoted in Matthew 13, Jesus makes clear that "all causes of sin and all evildoers" will be removed from his kingdom at the same time as the elect are gathered. This he emphasizes further in another of the Matthew 13 parables, verses 47-50:

"Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a net which was thrown into the sea and gathered fish of every kind; when it was full, men drew it ashore and sat down and sorted the good into vessels but threw away the bad. So will be at the close of the age. The angels will come out and separate the evil from the righteous, and throw them into the furnace of fire; there men will weep and gnash their teeth."

Doubtless it will be at this time that the Lawless One will come to his end as it is described by John in Revelation 19:19-20: "And I saw the beast and the kings of the earth with their armies gathered to make war against him who sits upon the throne [LORD Jesus] and against his army. And the beast was captured, and with it the false prophet who in its presence had deceived those who had received the mark of the beast and those who worshiped its image. These two were thrown into the lake of fire that burns with brimstone. And the rest were slain by the sword of him who sits upon the horse, and their blood was drunk by the birds of the air; and all the birds were gorged with their flesh."

The Jew and You

In this review of his dramatic return to earth, the Lord Jesus has laid great stress upon its effect on Israel. Probably the majority today, are not Jewish but Gentile. You may well ask, "What significance has all this for me?" As we have already seen, whenever God wants us to understand how he will handle us as believers today, he holds before us the history of the Jewish people. Briefly retrace the history of this race and you will see what is meant. In that desperate hour when they were slaves in bondage in Egypt, the angel of death passed over and spared them, and in that first Passover they were born as a nation to God. They were redeemed, brought out of bondage, and set free. Then, in the marvelous phrasing of Moses, God carried them on eagles' wings and bore them along, upholding them, and sustaining them by miraculous interventions on their behalf. (Exodus 19:4.)

But his goodness and grace were repaid, for the most part, by pride, arrogance, and a self-righteous effort to please him without genuine conviction of heart. They fell to murmuring, complaining, and grumbling, in constant frustration of God's efforts. At last there follows the story of gradually increasing moral failure and of final dispersion in moral bankruptcy and desolation.

For centuries they wandered throughout the length and breadth of the earth, preserved as a nation, but still in unbelief. When they were allowed to go back to Israel and establish themselves as a nation, again they did so in unbelief. But, says Jesus, when he is coming when by an act of sovereign grace, without any merit on their part, God will bring them back again to the land, there will be an hour of mourning and repentance when they will understand at last what God has been wanting to do with them, and then enter into a time of national health and wholeness and will become the instrument of blessing to all the earth.

If you read carefully the book of Romans you will see that the same story is told in chapters 5-8. These detail for us the way God will bring us into genuine liberty, genuine joy and the true excitement of life. In chapters 9-11 of Romans' I see the illustration of all this. These trace for us the way God will work with us. When we come to the place of utter moral bankruptcy, when we stop thinking we can contribute something of value to God, and begin at last to rest, to rely wholly on his ability to do everything through us-then we begin to enter into the fullness of life that God has planned for man. This is the story of God's dealings with Israel.

Prayer

Lord Jesus, we thank you that at this very moment we may experience your living presence in our hearts. We do not know when until some future day in order to know the glory of your presence. We long for the day when earth shall know your power and glory, but in the meantime we are glad we can say with deep personal meaning: "Thine is the kingdom, O God, the glory." In your name, Amen.

A THIEF IN THE NIGHT

Chapter 9. Matthew 24:32-44

How can we be sure all this will happen? No doubt you have asked that more than once before now. If you have, you are one to do so. In fact it would be rather strange if you haven't. Even Jesus anticipates a certain degree of honest doubt in his discourse (verse 32) he breaks off his description of the last days to give three powerful guarantees that all he has said will actually come to pass.

"From the fig tree learn its lesson; as soon as its branch becomes tender and puts forth its leaves, you know that summer is near. So also, when you see all these things, you know that he is near, at the very gates."

This is the first guarantee. It is another pattern from nature which illustrates the point he wishes to make. Everyone knows that when the trees begin to put forth their leaves it is an infallible indication that summer is near. Some have misread this to mean that the tree is a symbol for the nation Israel and that the Lord means to say that when Israel shows signs of life as a nation, the Lord is near. Of course that is perfectly true, but that is not what he is saying here. Luke tells us that he said this is not only of the tree, but also of "all the trees" (Luke 21:29).

What the Lord means is that as history unfolds and it becomes apparent that the world is heading toward the conditions he has described, then men can be very sure that his coming is near. The trend of world events is the guarantee that he has been telling us about the future. History will confirm his predictions as it unfolds. When the world reaches the stage he describes, and the coming of the Lawless One looms on the horizon of current affairs, then "he is near, at the very gates." We are now at the end of two thousand years of history and each man can judge for himself whether or not the world is approaching these events.

The Indestructible Generation

Then the Lord offers a second guarantee, contained in an often misunderstood statement in verse 34:

"Truly, I say to you, this generation will not pass away till all these things take place."

Many have wondered exactly what he meant by these words. Did he refer to the generation to which he was speaking and their contemporaries? Or did he perhaps mean the generation which would be alive when the events he predicted would be fulfilled? If that is what he meant, he would have been saying that when these events begin they would be completed by the end of that generation would pass. Each of these meanings has been suggested as a possible explanation of his words.

But the truth is, he meant neither of these. Of course, if he meant the disciples' generation then his words have long since proven false. And the second explanation involves a very forced and unnatural meaning for the word "this." The only other alternative is that the word "generation" means the Jewish people. "This people will not pass away till all these things take place."

The Indestructible People

It is almost certain that this is what the Lord meant, for he used the word "generation" in this very sense in the previous chapter. In Matthew 23:33-36. He was speaking in severe and sharp tones to the Pharisees, and he said: "You serpents, you brood of vipers, how are you to escape being sentenced to hell? Therefore I send you prophets and wise men and scribes, some of whom you have crucified, and some you will scourge in your synagogues and persecute from town to town, that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed on earth, from the blood of innocent Abel to the blood of Zechariah the son of Barachiah, whom you murdered between the sanctuary and the altar. Truly, I say to you, all this will come upon this generation."

The Lord surely did not mean by this that the Pharisees and their contemporaries would bear the blame for all the injustices of the world. No, he meant that Israel was the nation chosen to be the instrument of God to teach the whole world what he is like. When they failed, it became culpable for all the dire results that failure brings. It is the nation which was in view when he uses the word "generation."

Throughout twenty centuries of dispersion and persecution a most remarkable demonstration of the truth of the Bible Jewish people and their uncanny ability to survive as an identifiable race. Despite the long centuries of hardship and proved to be an indestructible people. That fact constitutes proof that what Jesus predicts will surely come to pass.

Surer Than Sunrise

The third assurance Jesus offers is his own infallible promise: "Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will not" (verse 35). How much value do you give to what he says? This is the One who came to blind eyes-and he did! He declared give his life as a ransom for many-and he did! He said he would rise again from the dead-and he did! Now he says he will pass away, can you believe him?

What is it we count on today as the most dependable thing we know? Is it not the continuity of events? We count on things to rise, on there being a future. We lay our plans on that basis. But Jesus says that will stop, will pass away, but his coming. His coming, then, is more certain than the most certain thing we know of. The word by which all things were called into existence, the foundation upon which he rests his statement, "my words will not pass away."

Unpredictable Timing

At this point in the discourse there comes a definite break. The Lord has completed his outline of the events during his coming. He has revealed his parousia, his presence on earth, during the entire period of the last days and also the spectacular outshining of his presence on earth, during the entire period of the last days and also the spectacular outshining of his presence to occur. Now, he has said very little about its beginning. Now, in verses 36-41, he brings that remarkable event before the disciples as a point of emphasis:

"But of that day and hour no one knows, not even the angels of heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only. As it was in the days of Noah, so will be the coming of the Son of man. For as in those days before the flood, people were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day when Noah entered the ark, and they did not know until the flood came and swept them all away, so will be the coming of the Son of man. There will be two men in the field; one is taken and one is left. Two women will be grinding at the mill; one is taken and one is left."

As we mentioned in an earlier chapter, some have confused this coming with the glorious manifestation of his presence in verse 30. But the first sentence of this section makes clear which aspect of his presence the Lord is describing. He says forcefully that this coming will be completely unpredictable. "But of the day and hour no one knows, not even the angels nor the Son, but the Father only."

This unpredictable element is underscored heavily in the additional warning he gives the disciples in verses 42-44:

"Watch therefore, for you do not know on what day your Lord is coming. But know this, that if the thief came at night, he would have broken into the house and would have let his house be broken into. Therefore you also must be ready; for the Son of man is coming at an hour you do not expect."

It would be impossible for Jesus to use these words if he were referring to the coming in power and great glory. Before that occurs "the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens will be shaken." Who could miss that? Who, knowing the Scriptures, would not expect the return of Jesus at such events? But to his disciples he says, "The Son of man is coming at an hour you do not expect."

This is clearly then his coming as a thief in the night. It is his coming for the church, the unsuspected treasure of earth to take it to himself, and the world will have no inkling that it is about to occur. As he has just said, we can know his coming is drawing near as we observe the predicted pattern taking shape in the affairs of men. We can see the attitudes that herald that day beginning to emerge as the dominant philosophy of the day. But we can never know the day nor the hour. Earth did not know, nor did the Son in the time of his earthly limitation, but only the Father.

Men seem to display an urgent passion to set dates for the coming of Christ. Several times in history it has been announced that Christ would return on such and such a date. Some fanatics who believed these reports sold their property, donned white robes, and gone out on some hilltop to wait for him to appear. The whole subject of the return of Christ has been cast into disrepute by such foolish actions. God has maintained an inscrutable silence about certain matters and this is one of them. The day now marked "Top Secret," just as Jesus told the disciples after the resurrection, "It is not for you to know times or seasons which the Father has fixed by his own authority" (Acts 1:7). The activity Jesus wants to encourage is not date-setting but readiness.

Business as Usual

Jesus makes even more forceful this totally unexpected character of his initial coming by comparing it to the days of Noah in verse 37-39:

"As were the days of Noah, so will be the coming [parousia] of the Son of man. For as in those days before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day when Noah entered the ark, and they did not know until the flood came and swept them all away, so will be the coming of the Son of man."

There have been many attempts to make these words, "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage," to indicate things in the affairs of men. "Eating" has been taken to mean an increase in gluttony throughout the earth. It is, of course, one of the signs of middle age is to grow thick, and tired of it, but this is not a sign of the times! Also, "drinking" has been made to mark an increase in alcoholism and drunkenness, while "marrying and giving in marriage" has been made to refer to the increasing divorce rate.

But there is no thought of this in the mind of our Lord. What he is saying is, life will be going on as usual. Men will marry just as they have always done. It was like that in the days of Noah, before the flood. Life was going on in ordinary fashion. Moral conditions were bad, there was violence and corruption throughout the earth, but they were not worse than they are quite some time.

The point our Lord makes is that "they did not know" until the flood came. There was no sense of any coming disaster despite the preaching of Noah for one hundred and twenty years, during which he faithfully warned his generation that the world of that day. And despite the familiar sight of the huge ark that was built a long way from any ocean large enough to hold it. Men must have laughed and called him "crazy Noah." But life went on as usual and the first sign of any coming disaster was the almost unnoticed removal of a select company from the world of that day.

Noah and his family were told to take the animals and go into the ark. God shut the door of the ark so that Noah and his family, people in all, were separated from the world. Then a full week went by and nothing happened. Noah, his family and all who were in the ark for a week and during that time the skies were blue, the sun shone, men went to work in the morning and home in the evening. Lovers strolled hand in hand as they had done for centuries. Babies cried, men ate and drank and rose up in the morning. Life went on as usual. Then suddenly clouds began to form, the skies darkened, the earth began to heave, the bottom of the sea and great tidal waves came crashing across the earth, the skies poured down untold tons of water for forty days and forty nights. For those who lived in the world of that day, "Went down with a bubbly groan, Unwept, unhonored and unknown."

So, the Lord says, will be the "parousia," the coming as a thief in the night. Jesus Christ will come stealthily, without warning. A select company will be removed from the earth. That event he plainly describes in verses 40,41: "Then two men will be working in the field; one is taken and one is left. Two women will be grinding at the mill; one is taken and the other is left."

A Selective Removal

The event will be highly selective, distinguishing even between two people working side by side. Further, it will be without warning. Luke tells us (17:34), "There will be two men in one bed; one will be taken, and the other left." While men work in the field on one side of the earth, others will be asleep in their beds on the other side. But simultaneously, both in the day and in the night, the removal will occur.

From human experience we feel there is only one way to leave this life. We enter it through the door marked "birth," and we leave it through the door marked "death." But on the Mount of Transfiguration the Lord showed Peter, James and John that way by which men could go to glory. He was suddenly transfigured before their astonished eyes. His raiment began to be like a different person, yet the same Jesus.

So Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15:51,52: "We shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." It is an event simply unexplainable in natural terms, but there can be no questions about the clear language Paul employs. As Paul told the Thessalonians: "The dead in Christ will rise first; then we who are alive, who are left, shall be taken together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thessalonians 4:16,17).

There are some Bible scholars who take the Lord's words, "one is taken and the other left," in a somewhat different light. The ones taken are not taken to glory but taken in judgment during the tribulation, i.e., killed, while the ones left are left to enter into the kingdom following. This, they say, would be more in line with the illustration the Lord uses of Noah's flood which was swept away by the judgment of the flood.

But several severe objections appear to this opinion. First, no one was left behind in Noah's flood. They were all taken and there was nothing selective about it. The only ones who survived were Noah and his family who were taken out of the flood as it began. Second, the word the Lord uses for "taken" is a different Greek word from that which is used for the effect of the flood. It is one word, translated, "swept away." Third, the picture the Lord draws is one of sudden, unexpected removal and it is not of that picture to imagine execution as always occurring in that manner throughout the Tribulation. Fourth, if the Lord is describing his coming for the church then we have no description from his lips of that tremendous event. All we would have is his promise, "I will come again and will take you to myself" (John 14:3).

Because of these objections it is much more plausible to view this passage as our Lord's clear description of his coming "in the night," accomplishing a silent resurrection and transfiguration which will take the true church out of judgment of the world as Noah and his family were taken out of the judgment of the flood. To this vivid description of the silent departure of the church the Lord immediately adds a word of admonition: "Watch therefore, for you do not know on what day your Lord is coming. For if the thief had known that if the householder had known in what part of the night the thief was coming, he would have watched, and would not have let his house be broken into. Therefore you also must be ready; for the Son of man is coming at an hour you do not expect."

Notice carefully his argument here. He says that if the householder had known when the thief was coming he would have prevented the robbery. That is, if a man knows he is to be robbed at night, and knows the very hour in which it will occur, he will be ready for the burglar when he comes. No burglar sends a notice ahead of time of his arrival, but if he did he could be being met by a reception committee. When the robber arrived, the householder would be ready.

So says Jesus, since you do not know when your Lord is coming, then keep ready all the time. Be always ready. Surely that does not mean we are to gaze skyward all the time, or fold our hands and sit down to wait for him. Some years ago a religious magazine published a cartoon that showed a man standing in a wheat field. The sheaves had been stacked in bundles waiting for harvest. The man was standing there with a telescope glued to his eyes looking out to the horizon. Underneath was the caption, "Looking for the Lord." It suggested that such looking was foolish while the fields were white unto harvest all around, and nothing was to be done.

It is very difficult, of course, to keep one eye peeled toward the sky while doing your daily work. But our Lord does not mean that when he says, "Watch!" What does he mean? Clearly one thing he means by this, as highlighted throughout this discourse, is to be deceived! He has been warning of the deceitfulness of the age. We shall be surrounded by the spurious, the phony, which will nevertheless dazzle us and draw us. If we believe the lies that are part of the great brainwashing campaign behind the scenes of the world, we shall soon lose our perspective. Life will then get out of focus and we shall become blinded and tragically separated from the truth. The only defense is a continuous, step-by-step, reliance on the truth of God, illuminated to us by an indwelling Holy Spirit (John 8:31,32). That is why we desperately need the Word of God, and the Spirit of God to apply that Word to our daily experience. Our defense against deceit is an obedient ear and a willingness to follow the promptings of the Spirit into an unceasing readiness of concern and service, in the name of Jesus Christ. In another place, Jesus said "Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:13, KJV). That means keep going, keep busy in the strength and the purpose of God.

A Strange Paradox

Many Christians seem to feel that waiting for Christ's coming means that we must behave ourselves lest we should be caught short by his appearing and be ashamed of what we were doing. But Jesus is no policeman, waiting to surprise unguarded moment. The paradox of the Christian life is that though we look for him to come, yet all the while we are in his presence and experiencing his power. He is coming, and yet he is with us now.

What Jesus wants us to grasp is that these two activities are related. The intensity with which we love his coming is proportional to the degree to which we are experiencing his presence. The hunger you may feel to see his face is directly proportional to the enjoyment you have of his presence. If, to you, the thought of his coming is a frightening thing, then you know little of his presence now. But if you do know what it means to live by Christ, if moment by moment with your whole being you are in communion with him all that he makes available to you, you will find a longing, a yearning in your heart for his personal coming. A Christian poetess, Annie Johnson Flint, has put that thought in a wonderful fashion:

"It is not for a sign we are watching
 For wonders above and below,
 The pouring of vials of judgment,
 The sounding of trumpets of woe;
 It is not for a Day we are looking,
 Not even the time yet to be
 When the earth shall be filled with God's glory
 As the waters cover the sea;
 It is not for a King we are longing
 To make the world-kingdoms His own;
 It is not for a Judge who shall summon
 The nations of earth to His throne.

Not for these, though we know they are coming;
 For they are but adjuncts of Him,
 Before whom all glory is clouded,
 Besides whom all splendor grows dim.
 We wait for the Lord, our Beloved,
 Our Comforter, Master and Friend,
 The substance of all that we hope for,
 Beginning of faith, and its end;
 We watch for our Savior and Bridegroom,
 Who loved us and made us His own;
 For Him we are looking and longing;
 For Jesus, and Jesus alone." *

The great Scottish minister, Horatio Bonar, on one occasion sat with a number of fellow ministers. He said to them, "Do you expect Jesus Christ to come today?" One by one he went around the circle and put that question to each. And one by one they shook their heads and said, "No, not today." Then without comment he wrote on a piece of paper these words and passed it to the next. "Therefore you also must be ready; for the Son of man is coming at an hour you do not expect."

Prayer

Lord Jesus, Thank you that we do not need to wait until some future day to know the glory of your presence, but that we are in it during every day we live. But we pray that in this moment of waiting and watching we shall recognize that the strength of our faith is determined by the experience of your present life. Teach us then how to "occupy till you come," in a ministry of love and help to others. In your name, Amen.

IN THE MEAN TIME

Chapter Ten. Matthew 24:45-51

In a small country store in a southern state a Negro lady came to do her shopping. Two or three young Negro men were around passing the time of day, and knowing that she was a Christian, they began to taunt her. "We hear you're expected to come back," they said.

"I sure am," she replied brightly.

"Do you really believe he's coming?" they asked.

"Sure as you're born," she answered.

They said, "Well you'd better hurry home and get ready, he might be on the way!"

She turned and fixed her tormentors with a look. "I don't have to get ready," she said, "I keep ready!"

That is exactly the attitude the Lord meant to engender when he said to his disciples, "Watch!" He does not mean, "Keep ready at all times." He means "Keep ready at all times." Now to make it perfectly clear what that would involve he goes on to give three parables, each of which is an exposition of that one word, "Watch!" The first is the parable of the household which teaches that watching means a mutual concern and ministry of the Word to one another. The second is the parable of the ten maidens which makes clear that watching means a dependence on deeper things than mere human resources. And the third is the parable of the faithful and wise servant which we learn that watching means a deliberate investment of life.

Three Illustrative Parables

It is evident that the Lord now finished, for the most part, the predictive part of his discourse. Except for a few details of the final scene of the nations, there are no new events described in the rest of his message. But it is extremely important to understand these parables, for if we do not understand them we will not watch in the way he expects. And if we do not watch we will be deceived and miss much, if not all, of the exciting possibilities of the present hour. So let us listen carefully to his parables. The first is the parable of the household, verses 45-47:

"Who then is the faithful and wise servant, whom his master has set over his household, to give them their food at the proper time? Blessed is that servant whom his master when he comes will find so doing. Truly I say to you, he will set him over all his possessions."

This parable is clearly for the instruction of those who are awaiting the Lord's return. The master of the household is Jesus Christ. He has entrusted certain work to his steward until he returns. That work is primarily a ministry to the rest of the household. "I will give them their food at the proper time." It is clearly addressed to the disciples and to those who will follow in their ministry of feeding and shepherding the church of Jesus Christ. Doubtless it includes any who have a ministry of teaching, whether evangelists, prophets, elders, Sunday School teachers, children's workers and Bible class leaders. It takes in any who have a ministry of teaching, whether exercised in a church building or in homes. It includes theological professors, editors of magazines, missionaries, youth workers, and many others.

Give Them Food!

Since this is the first parable in the series it probably points up the most essential element in the matter of watching. It is given one major and primary responsibility: to feed the household at the proper time. If this is rightly done, the household will be ready for watching; if it is neglected, the household will languish and starve, and will not be ready when the Lord returns.

The task, therefore, of any leader within the church is to unfold the message of the Bible. Every pastor should set a goal for his congregation, not only that they might eat and grow, but also that they might learn from him how to draw from the Bible for themselves the spiritual nourishment they need. The Bible is wonderfully adapted to this purpose: there is milk for the young and for the more advanced, and strong meat to challenge and feed the mature. It is so designed that when books of the Bible are read through consecutively they will cover a wide variety of subjects and yet keep truth marvelously in balance.

It is clearly evident, therefore, that the supreme need of the church during this time of waiting for its Lord is Bible study and knowledge. From this all else will flow. The Bible is the revelation of things as they really are. It represents the only way to look at life that is available to man today. It is the only instrument provided by God that is adequate to the task of producing well-adjusted, whole persons. That is the clear claim of 2 Timothy 3:16,17:

"All scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, and for training in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, equipped for every good work."

I am the Bread of Life

Be careful that you do not conclude from this that the Bible itself is the food for believers. It is not the book but the Christ the book reveals that is our food. Christ is found in the Scriptures, both Old and New Testaments. But Bible study alone is dry and uninteresting if one does not expect the Spirit to take the words and from them cause the living Christ to emerge. This is why some Bible students are such dull and dry people; they have concentrated on the Word alone, without the Spirit. It is impossible to know the Lord Jesus in the fullness of his being without the revelation of the Word. We cannot neglect the Word if we want to grow in Christ; but we can grow in the knowledge of Scripture and never feed upon a risen Lord.

The Incredible Reward

Imagine the joy of that servant when his lord returns and finds him faithfully at the task he assigned him. "Blessed is the servant who says Jesus. The Greek word for "blessed" can also be translated "happy." What a satisfying feeling it will be to know that you have worked well in the eyes of the only one who counts. What shall be done for such a man? What the Lord says next is to listen to it: "Truly, I say to you, he will set him over all his possessions." In another place Jesus said, "You have been faithful over a little, I will set you over much" (Matthew 25:21). This is the invariable rule of the kingdom of God.

When you consider who this master really is, it becomes almost incredible that he should reward this servant by setting him over his possessions. How much is that? Well, Paul wrote in I Corinthians 3:21-23: "For all things are yours, whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas or the world or life or death or the present or the future, all are yours; and you are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

There is a staggering thought in Paul's letter to the Ephesians which sums all this up in the phrase, "the unsearchable riches of Christ." Who can tell what boundless opportunities, what indescribable adventures of service, what fabulous vistas of life are involved in a phrase like that? Surely one thing is clear: the commitment and labor required to fulfill the ministry of testimony that the Lord has left for us to do will not be worthy to be compared with what shall belong to a "faithful and wise servant" when he returns.

The Unfaithful Servant

But unfortunately not every servant of the Lord proves to be wise and faithful. With the utter candor that characterizes the negative side of the picture in verses 48-51:

"But if that wicked servant says to himself, 'My master is delayed,' and begins to beat his fellow servants and eat and drink with the drunken, the master of that servant will come on a day when he does not expect him and at an hour he does not know, and will punish him, and put him with the hypocrites; there men will weep and gnash their teeth."

It is evident that this servant has the same ministry committed to him as the first one. He, too, is expected "to give an account at the proper time." The same storehouse of the Word is at his disposal so that he too can feed the hungry of the household when they need it. The health and welfare of the household is his responsibility and depends upon his faithful ministry.

But this servant is different. When his lord does not come as soon as he expects, he says to himself, "My master is more than a hint here that the return of the Lord Jesus will be delayed far beyond the expectations of men. The apostle in the first century, but he did not come. Now many centuries have gone by, and the effect of that long delay has been here predicts. Many who claim to be his servants have given up hope of his return. The former bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Pike, himself one who had given up such a hope, stated that "only 24% of Episcopalians, by survey, believe it." * The lost hope is immediately apparent. The servant, says the Lord, begins to beat his fellow servants, mistreat them, criticizes them continually, neglect his ministry, and indulge his appetites to the full. It is a vivid picture of what happens, in one degree or another, when the expectation of the Lord's return is abandoned. There is a precise sequence of failure that can be traced. First the Lord's return grows weak and eventually is lost. Because of this there is little motivation to the ministry of feeding the household, therefore it is neglected. When the Word is not taught the people grow spiritually weak, and therefore full of weakness. This then manifests itself in quarreling, injustices, and excesses of every sort, in which the servant responsible for the household joins.

It should be obvious from this that the fact of Christ's return is more important as a doctrine of the church than man's. As we have already seen, it is an indicator of the degree to which the Lord's present indwelling life is being experienced. When there is a desire for his appearing, there is little concern to walk in the strength of his life. When the hope of the Lord's return is already apparent that the experience of his life has largely ceased, if it existed at all. That is why the Lord lays such stress on it and underscores it as the primary cause for the neglect of Bible teaching and the subsequent weakness of the church.

But though the servant has given up on the Lord's return, that does not prevent the Lord from returning. Suddenly he comes at an hour which the servant does not know and at a time when he does not expect him. Undoubtedly this will be one of the things which the servant will say, "Lord, Lord, have I not done mighty works in your name?" There may indeed be other things which he felt would be impressive to the Lord if he returned. But it is all to no avail. He has specifically not done the things the Lord required of him. He has been faithless to his commission. Therefore he shall be punished and put where he belongs with the hypocrites! He is himself a hypocrite, for he has assumed the name of a faithful servant of the Lord, but has proved himself otherwise. It is obvious from what our Lord says of this man, that he has never been a true servant at all. His destiny is to be in the place where men will weep and gnash their teeth. Further on, in chapter 25, verse 30, the Lord describes that place as "a place of frustration and defiance. Men weep because of their lost opportunities; they gnash their teeth out of bitter disappointment. It is not a pleasant picture, but let us remember, it is the Lord Jesus Christ who thus describes it to us.

A Demoralized Household

The Lord has made crystal clear by this parable that it is a very serious thing to fail in feeding the household of God. The man's personal failure has a demoralizing effect upon the household. This has been most apparent in the church. One of the haunting problems in the church today is its identity crisis. In many places it seems to have lost the sense of what it is to be. Instead of a body, with each one "members one of another" and ministering to one another in love and concern, it is an organization operating various programs. Paul wrote to the Galatians, "Bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of love" (Galatians 6:2). But today's Christians often touch each others' lives on only the most superficial basis, and do not walk with one another's problems because they "don't want to get involved."

This widespread ignorance of the church's true nature is directly traceable to a lack of systematic Bible teaching. Many of the New Testament epistles plainly detail the true nature of the church. Its "body life" is clearly described and illustrated from the experience. Its supernatural endowment with spiritual gifts as the basis for all its ministry is described in half a dozen places. Its unique power, deriving from the presence of an indwelling and active Lord, is set before us again and again. The way to the exercise of spiritual power, making its impact upon a decadent society, is detailed in many places.

Results of Biblical Ignorance

But how much does the average Christian know of this? The blunt answer is: scarcely anything! The degree of biblical ignorance prevalent in American churches, is beyond belief. And the widespread effect, visible everywhere, is a powerless, quarrelsome, and materialistic church whose knowledge of its Lord's living presence is almost nil, and whose hope of his soon return has burned out into gray embers.

The cause for this sterile mediocrity is, says Jesus, faithless and wicked servants who have never assumed or have neglected feeding the household at the proper time. He views this failure with the greatest solemnity. There is a sobering word in 1 Corinthians 3:17: "If any one destroys God's temple, God will destroy him. For God's temple is holy, and that temple you are."

Consequently we should not be surprised to hear Jesus say that when the master of the house returns he will confront the servant and "will punish him, and put him with the hypocrites; there men will weep and gnash their teeth."

The Secrets of the Heart

In both of these cases, that of the faithful and that of the faithless servant, it is evident that the return of Jesus Christ is what men have been all the time. "Each man's work will become manifest," says Paul, "for the Day will disclose it" (1 Corinthians 4:3-5). The truly shocking thing about that is that what we are proved to be in that Day, we must continue to be forever. What has been in the secret places of the heart through life must now be displayed as our true self through eternity.

Thus the Lord desires to emphasize to us that the present time is an exceedingly precious commodity. It is given to us only once. Helmut Thielicke, * a noted German author, points out that on New Year's Eve we learn something about time we can never learn any other way. Then we look at our watch or clock quite differently from any other day of our lives. Usually we glance at it in order to see what time we should be at a certain place, or whether we are going to make an appointment on time. But on New Year's Eve we suddenly, look at it, not in order to move ourselves, but because we become aware of the fact that time itself is passing.

Our Personal Time Line

Dr. Thielicke says that then we can almost hear the stream of time beginning to murmur as it drops over the dam of midnight. We become aware of the fact that we are not living an endless repetitive cycle, but we are moving on through time and we can never retrace it. The reason we do not experience this more frequently is because our clocks are round. If we haven't finished something by six o'clock this morning we know that the hands of the clock will come around to six o'clock again and we can get it done by then. Or by six o'clock tomorrow night. We suffer, therefore, from the illusion that time is a cycle.

But on New Year's Eve, we discover otherwise. We become quite aware, as the midnight hour approaches, that time is passing continually on and that we can never go back, that what we have been will unalterably remain, forever. It can never be changed. We can never retrace our steps nor refill the contents of the past with something either better or worse. It remains exactly as it was. Perhaps last year we made a wrong decision or got married (the two are not necessarily linked) or entered into some business or achieved some goal. Whatever it was, that has now become an unchangeable part of our destiny, our lot. It is irrevocable. It can never be changed. God's grace has moved him to bear certain effects of our misdeeds himself, but they remain forever. They are never dissipated into nothingness. If that grace is rejected, there is no escape.

A Final New Year's Eve

This is what the sudden intervention of Jesus Christ into human affairs seems to be: a final New Year's Eve midnight. We will become aware that life has been lived, and it is whatever it is and will never be any different. No one can go back. That leaves us facing an inevitable question: How long have you lived? "Oh," you say, "I am (so many) years old." No, you are not. Your answer in those terms. The only part of life that can be called living is the time you have been watching for your Lord. It is the strength of his abiding life. All else is death.

The great missionary to Africa, C. T. Studd, summed up the truth in a little couplet:

"Only one life, 'twill soon be past,
Only what's done for Christ will last."

Now let us ask it again: How long have you lived? How much of your life will abide the day of his coming? Whatever silver or precious stones, coming from the activity of his life in you, is nothing more than hay, wood, and stubble. What are you going to start living? You only have today!

Prayer

Father, keep us from the folly of dreaming away our days in a fruitless endeavor to satisfy only the fancies of our souls and the appetites of our bodies. Deliver us from the bondage of things. Teach us how to feed upon the Word of truth, and to abide continually in that truth, manifesting the splendor of your life in us. In Jesus' name, Amen.

THE WISE AND THE FOOLISH

Chapter Eleven. Matthew 25:1-13

The Second Parable

Weddings never go out of style. They are as old fashioned as the race and as modern as today's newspaper. There is something beautiful about each one for we never seem to get over the excitement of watching two lives become one. At most a little fuss is made over the bride and groom, but no one pays much attention to the attendants. Not so with Jesus. He chose this wedding scene as a parable, to illustrate further what he means by the command, "Watch!" He doesn't even mention the bridegroom incidentally. His attention is focused on ten young ladies who were invited to the marriage.

Do not pay any attention to the chapter division which occurs at this point in the biblical text. It is the unexpected for the church, and of the need to keep watching for it. This is made evident by his use of "Then" to introduce the parable of the ten maidens. "Then the kingdom of heaven shall be compared to ten maidens," etc. It is at the time of his coming as a thief in the night, before the Great Tribulation, when he shall appear on a day when he does not expect him and at an hour he does not expect. He finishes the story of the ten maidens the Lord adds again, "Watch therefore, for you know neither the day nor the hour." Let us now join him as he relates this story to the disciples on the Mount of Olives.

"Then the kingdom of heaven shall be compared to ten maidens who took their lamps and went to meet the bridegroom. Five of them were foolish, and five were wise. For when the foolish took their lamps, they took no oil with them; but the wise took flasks of oil with their lamps. As the bridegroom was delayed, they all slumbered and slept. But at midnight there was a cry, 'Behold, the bridegroom! Come out to meet him.' Then all those maidens rose and trimmed their lamps" (Matthew 25:1-7).

That is not the whole story but it is enough of it to serve as an introduction. The background is an eastern wedding where the bridegroom, rather than the bride, is the center of attention. In Oriental weddings it is the bridegroom who bears all the expenses of the wedding (which seems a bit fairer than our system where the poor father of the bride has to foot the bill for giving his daughter to another man!) and thus has the prime spot. Weddings were always held at night and it was customary for the bridegroom to go to the house of the bride and take her to the wedding. As they walked through the streets they would be joined by guests along the route. Our Lord's story of the ten maidens is the story of such a group, waiting for the bridegroom.

There are five movements in this story as the Lord tells it. Let us remember that it was intended for those who live in the time between our Lord's first coming and his second. It will be of value to us only as we permit it to be autobiographical and recognize ourselves somewhere in the story. It is clearly intended to describe an element of watching that is vital and if we miss the point of it we shall be unable to watch for his coming as he desires.

A Common Expectation

The first movement of the story is one of a common expectation. Here is a body of people who are waiting for something to be made up of a great deal of waiting. When we are little we wait to get out on our own. When we are in college we wait to be married. When we get married we wait for children, and so it goes. One of the characteristics of life which make it worth the note of waiting. There must be something beyond, something worth waiting for. Otherwise life can become terribly purposeless.

These maidens were waiting for the coming of the bridegroom. In terms of the Lord's ultimate message, they were waiting for the coming of Jesus Christ. These maidens represent, therefore, those who are convinced that the end of the age will come and they describe it. They are not deluded by highly colored dreams of an earthly utopia which will be brought about by man's skill. They believe in a golden age, but they do not believe that age will ever come by the efforts of men. They are persuaded that the return of Jesus Christ can accomplish that end, and they are hopeful that his coming will be very soon.

Surely at this point in our study of the Olivet Discourse, most of the readers of this book will represent such a group listening to the words of God's greatest Prophet. We have heard what he predicts and understood the pattern that history draws to a close. We are convinced that history will end at the feet of this One who will come flaming in glory from the heavens to astonish a deluded world. We are, therefore, sharers with these ten maidens in a common expectation of the Bridegroom.

Wise and Foolish

But the second movement of this parable is one of division, of a divided procedure:

"Five of them were foolish, and five were wise. For when the foolish took their lamps, they took no oil with them; but the wise took flasks of oil with their lamps."

Though this group is united in its expectation it is quite divided in the way it conducts its waiting. Five maidens have extra oil, and five have not. This does not represent a division between good and bad, but, as Jesus says, between the wise and the foolish. Someone has said there are only two kinds of people in this world: the righteous and the unrighteous; but th have been busy doing natural and necessary things. These maidens were waiting for the bridegroom's coming, even when the bridegroom came. There was a sense of imminence when they went out, yet a perfectly proper activity took their attention for a time.

Here Comes the Bridegroom

But suddenly there is a cry of warning, "Behold! the bridegroom! Come out to meet him." It may well be that the ten sentry to warn them when the bridegroom came, or it may be that the bridegroom was preceded by someone sent to warn them. In any rate the cry is sounded and all ten of the maidens are awakened. Again it is clearly evident that the problem which confront them did not arise out of the fact that they had fallen asleep. They are awake in plenty of time to meet the bridegroom.

Many times we are, like these, called back to an awareness of the Lord's imminent return by events of the day, or so that time is short. We are often made aware that the grind and routine of life was never intended to go on that way forever. One day the awakening will come not through events but the actual cry, it may be, of the returning Lord himself. Perhaps when he comes for the church it will be with a shout, and that shout may be these electrifying words, "Behold, the Bridegroom!"

Inadequate Resources

The fourth movement of the story brings a crisis. In it is revealed the wisdom of the wise and the foolishness of the foolish. "Then all those maidens rose and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said to the wise, 'Give us some of your oil, for our lamps are going out.' But the wise replied, 'Perhaps there will not be enough for us and for you; go rather to the dealers and buy for yourselves.' To the consternation of the foolish, they find their lamps are flickering, guttering, about to go out. The long delay has passed and they have no more. They make their appeal to the wise: "Give us some of your oil." The reply of the wise indicates something that can be borrowed or loaned. Whatever it may represent, it is an individual matter. We have all felt some crisis hour when we have found our resources unequal to the demand. We see someone else who is going through the same thing, and he appears unmoved and calm, well able to take the pressure. We may long to borrow some of his strength, but it is impossible. In such an hour each has what he has and nothing more.

So it is with these five foolish maidens. Their oil is gone and to their dismay they discover their need and there is a possibility to get more. But our Lord moves right on into the story, and the final movement is one of denial:

"And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and those who were ready went in with him to the marriage feast; and the door was shut. Afterward the other maidens came also, saying, 'Lord, Lord, open to us.' But he replied, 'Truly, I say to you, I do not know you.' Watch therefore, for you know neither the day nor the hour."

When the foolish finally arrived, the door was shut. Are we not surprised at that? Many will probably feel that these five maidens were treated unfairly. Why should they not be allowed into the wedding, even if they were a few moments late? But there is no violation of a shut door. We must be careful that we do not impose our faulty judgments into this matter. What the Lord did was to be careful to look diligently for those clues that will help us learn why he takes such action as this. There is even a clue in these words, "I do not know you." Our Lord's words are a faithful, honest revelation of something that had been true from the beginning. Weddings are no place for strangers. Only the friends of the family are permitted to come. So to these five foolish maidens the door was shut for the Lord says, "Truly, I say to you, I do not know you."

The Meaning of Oil

With these revealing words from the Lord we can now discover what the oil signifies. Obviously, it was the lack of oil which caused these foolish maidens to be met with the words, "I do not know you." They did, of course, have some oil when they began but it was not enough. Oil, in the Old Testament, is frequently used as a symbol of the Holy Spirit. Kings and priests were anointed with oil as a sign of their consecrated (and, supposedly, Spirit-filled) lives. Zechariah, the prophet, was shown a great golden lampstand with two olive trees standing beside it. The trees dripped oil into the bowls of the lampstand, and he was told: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, says the LORD of hosts" (Zechariah 4:6). The oil symbolized the presence of God by which the light of testimony could be maintained in the hour of darkness.

Some ministry of the Spirit is then in view. The supreme ministry of the Spirit is to impart to men the knowledge of God. In John 16:13,14, Jesus said of him: "When the Spirit of truth comes, he will guide you into all the truth; for he will not speak on his own authority, but whatever he hears, he will speak, and he will declare to you the things that were to come."

authority, but...will declare to you the things that are to come. He will glorify me, for he will take what is mine and give it to you."

The Spirit's task then is to take the Word of God, and through it reveal Jesus Christ. But there are levels of such revelation, even a Spirit-born ministry of the word to those who are not true Christians. Jesus revealed this too. "When he comes to convince the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment" (John 16:8). Here is a ministry of the Holy Spirit available to all who will seek in the Scriptures to know the truth. But it is designed to take them deeper, into a fuller and permanent relationship which will involve the imparting of divine life.

Halfway is Not Enough

The great danger is that in exposure to the truth of Scripture, in the knowledge of its teaching, we should become a mere intellectual portrait of Christ instead of a living Lord. It is possible to know much doctrine but never to know the Lord. The problem with the foolish maidens, who represent those who gladly take enough of the oil of the Spirit to give them a temporary solution to their problems, or some release from fear or guilt, but who never go on to a surrender of the will to the authority of the Lord.

The foolish, then, are those who reckon no deeper than a superficial knowledge of scriptural truth. They look for more knowledge or for comfort in some hour of uncertainty and doubt. They read to gain reassurance when life seems to be a senseless struggle without apparent purpose. They believe in the Bible but not in the Lord of the Bible. But faith must go deeper than doctrine. Knowledge is worthless unless it leads to the surrender of self. God freely lights a lamp of knowledge for all who want it. The truth of revelation, but what Jesus indicates here is that there is a deeper level of commitment to the Spirit which is required when the unexpected demands life will thrust at us.

The wise have found that deeper level. They have an extra reservoir of oil which continually feeds the flame of life, never falter or gutter out in darkness, undergirding them in every hour of stress, of pressure or disaster, keeping them firm amidst the buffeting pressures of life. They have found a friend who sticks closer than a brother. They have a hidden source of mystic oil that lights the flame of life despite the circumstances, and the greater the pressure the brighter the light.

Perhaps a personal experience will illustrate this. I called on a man in the hospital once, a Christian of many years' standing, who was found to be unable to talk, sitting up in bed, his body wasted away to a skeleton. He was unable to move a muscle, even to turn his head. The best he could do in the way of talking was to utter a few guttural sounds. I asked him if he would like to hear the Scripture to him and he nodded his head. As I read, I watched his eyes. As the marvelous words from passages in the Bible sink into his ears, there came a flame into his eyes, a light such as never shone on land or sea. Before we finished, I saw in his emaciated body the glory of a flame burning, unquenchable, inexhaustible, fed by the oil of the Spirit, a flame that could not be extinguished.

Renounce or Risk!

Perhaps you are saying, "I'll get along as long as I have my friends and my church." But what if they are taken away? What if you are shipped out to some remote post somewhere, surrounded by 20th century pagans who have committed themselves to the satisfaction of their immediate lusts? What will happen to you then? What if you are transferred to another city where there is no church that ministers to your needs? What if you are confined to bed with a long-term illness, and you must lie there day after day with little opportunity to speak with others about the things of faith? Or, what is even more likely, what if you are imperceptibly, despite the eagerness you show now and the earnestness with which you read Scripture or go to church, gradually drawn back into the great cold indifference of the deluded masses?

If something like that happens it will do no good to say to another, "Give me of your oil." That cannot be done. Every person who has the Spirit's power to an individual is marked "Nontransferable." He cannot share it with anyone else. It has been said that there are two ways to take a thing seriously: either to renounce it or to risk everything upon it. Is this not what Jesus meant when he said, "Whoever would save his life will lose it, and whoever loses his life for my sake will find it" (Matthew 16:25)?

There are some who want a third choice, who are continually seeking to make a partial commitment, who try to find a middle arrangement with God in which they may subscribe to the truth of Scripture but refuse to let it change their activities. That third alternative simply does not exist. That is what Jesus is saying here. That is why he says plainly to the foolish maidens, "Truly, I say to you, I do not know you." The door is shut, both to the unbeliever who never tried to get in and to the foolish person who never took God seriously.

Prayer

Lord, how many of us are burning the candle of our life on the shallow reservoir of Scriptural knowledge but have not reached deeper? How many of us, Lord, are holding you at arm's length concerning specific matters and yet priding ourselves on our orthodoxy and our Christian faith? Save us from this folly. Bring us into that wonderful experience of finding a flame that cannot be put out. In your name, Amen.

LIVING DANGEROUSLY

Chapter 12. Matthew 25:14-30

Parables can be as exciting and challenging as detective stories. Even more so, for in the end they turn out to be dead ends while detective stories can be pretty far-fetched. But parables, like detective stories, are filled with half-hidden truths and meanings and yet with clues to these secrets scattered liberally throughout. Parables are God's exciting way of challenging our mystery hunt, and the treasure we are after is a new insight into the nature of life which will enrich us in a thousand ways upon it once it is discovered.

The Third Parable

The parable of the talents is the last in a series of three which Jesus gave his disciples to illustrate what he meant by "Watch!" Its opening words link it to the same time period as the first two, and it reflects the same basic pattern of leaving away and leaves a certain company to fulfill a task till he returns. Here is the introduction to it from Matthew 25:14:

"For it will be as when a man going on a journey called his servants and entrusted to them his property; to one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one, to each according to his ability. Then he went away. He who had received the five talents went at once and traded with them; and he made five talents more. So also, he who had the two talents made two talents more. But he who had received the one talent went away and hid his master's money."

Interpreting the Parable

In many ways this is a deeply puzzling parable. The central question of course, is: What do the talents represent? The answer is not quite shallow, understanding of this parable that it teaches the need for us to put our natural gifts to work for the Lord. "I play the piano and I would like to devote my talent to the Lord." Another says, "I think I have a gift for speaking (or for making money, etc.) and I would like to develop that talent and devote it to Christ."

But when we think of the parable in this way we are being misled by the modern meaning of talent. To us the word means a natural gift which we possess. But it definitely did not mean that in biblical times. The disciples thought of this word in terms of an amount of money. The talent was a specific weight of silver, worth about a thousand dollars. Though it was a definite amount of money in the story the Lord told, yet it represents something other than money in our lives. We shall see in a moment that the talents represent the natural gifts we possess. But the major question before us is: What has the Lord given to us to invest with the talents given to the servants in the parable?

Another easy pitfall we must avoid is to interpret this parable as though it dealt only with the matter of ultimate reward. This concept often accompanies the idea that the talents represent natural gifts. We must use our natural gifts to the best of our ability, are told, lest in the end we lose our reward, though of course, we will not lose our salvation. But salvation is the very stake in this parable. It is the ultimate destiny of a professed servant of Christ which is the issue. The last line of the parable is crystal clear. Of the man with one talent, the returned master says, "Cast the worthless servant into the outer darkness; there he will weep and gnash his teeth." The final scene therefore reveals that the worthless servant was not really a Christian. It is apparent that the talents are not distributed only to true believers but are given to false and true alike, that is, any who recognize the authority of the Lord and who claim to be his servants. But what is done with the talents distributed to the false? A vital issue. The destiny of the individual hangs on the matter. It is a question of life or death.

Once again, we must treat this parable autobiographically. We must see that it is intended for us. In Mark's account of the parable (Mark 13:32-37), the Lord says, "What I say to you [disciples] I say to all: Watch." The parable is addressed to those of any interest or conviction that what Jesus describes as the outcome of history will actually take place. To each one of us is distributed one or more talents. We are either trading with it or burying it in the ground. As we read the parable we must face the terrible loneliness, that central issue.

Now, having gotten our perspective straight, we turn to the inevitable question, "What are the talents, in our experience, several clues given to us in the account which will guide us in this search. We shall discover and assess them one by one."

The first clue is found in the opening verse, "For it will be as when a man going on a journey called his servants and entrusted to them his property." The last two words are the key: "his property." That is another term for the talents which are distributed. They are the Lord's property, God's property. They are then, not something which man can give, but something which God alone can give. Talents are not distributed, like natural gifts, to all men freely, but are given only to those who in some fashion have become servants of the Lord. To them he is willing to distribute his property.

The second clue is found in the next verse, "to one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one, to each according to his ability." Again, the last phrase is extremely helpful. Here we learn that the talents are clearly not natural abilities but are distributed on the basis of natural ability. To one man the Lord gave five talents because he was a man of great natural ability and many gifts. To another he gave two talents because he was not as gifted as the first, and to the third man he only gave one talent because he had few natural abilities. Whatever the talents may be, one thing is certainly clear: they are not natural abilities. The number of talents given is determined by the number of natural gifts possessed.

The third clue is not stated in the text but is clearly implied. It is the unspoken implication that the Lord expected the servants to invest the talents he distributed in such a way as to produce gain. The talent, then, is something that can be invested and that carries the possibility of producing gain or loss. The decision to risk is wholly the servant's. He can choose to take this risk as the first two servants did, or he can utterly refuse to do so, as the third one did.

The fourth clue is likewise implied. It is that the investment must be made wholly for the benefit of the absent Lord. The talent given to the servant for his own use. It remains the property of his absent Lord and is to be used for his benefit.

But it is the third and fourth qualifications which mark an opportunity as equivalent to the biblical talent. Opportunities come to all kinds of people, Christian or not; but those opportunities which involve the possibility of gain to Christians. Such opportunities are moments of decision when we must choose to play it safe and get w ourselves, or risk our reputation or even our life in order that God may have what he wants. They are hours of fatefu cast the die of our lives for ultimate good or evil, though at the moment the only questions we may face is, "Will th want, or will it only make possible for Jesus Christ to do what he wants to do through me?"

These moments can occur when we are confronted with moral choices. "Should I yield to my passions to do this thi wrong, and thus satisfy myself and my urging friends; or should I refuse it, be true to what God wants of me, and pe friends and certainly the immediate satisfaction of my lusts?" "Should I accept this new promotion, involving as it doe questionable business ethics; or should I pass up, for my conscience' sake, the possibility of some new furniture and the increase in salary would buy?"

Or perhaps there is no moral issue involved, but only the question of where our gifts are to be exercised. "Should I re inner urge to invest my life as a social worker in a slum area for Christ's sake; or should I play it safe and continue n to be a rich lawyer?" "Should I take the time to teach this home Bible class with its life-changing possibilities; or sho reserving each Tuesday night for bowling with my friends?" "Should I get involved with my neighbor's seemingly endle good and faithful servant; you have been faithful over a little, I will set you over much; enter into the joy of your master. There is not one syllable of difference between what the Lord says to the man with two talents and what he said to the man with one talent.

Perhaps before we go on to view the accounting of the third man, it would be well to pause to answer a question that may occur to many. What are the additional talents gained by the two men when they invested the talents they were given on behalf of their master? These first two men each had double the talents they were given. What do the additional talents represent? Certainly they represented opportunities then would not the talents gained represent the same? But in the second case, opportunities were gained on a higher level, in a higher realm. If the talents given represent opportunities to invest natural gifts, then very likely the talents gained represent opportunities to invest spiritual gifts, those gifts of the Spirit listed in 1 Corinthians 12 and Romans 12 which are given to every Christian without exception.

If this is so, they would be opportunities earned, the right gained to exercise spiritual impact, spiritual power. How many of us have discovered they have a spiritual gift only when they have seized an occasion to be of use to Christ? They have taken a great venture, for his name's sake. Feeling ill-equipped and clumsy at first, nevertheless, they went on doing what needed to be done. Before long it was evident to all, and even to them, that they had a gift for the work, one of the gifts of the Spirit. In the case of the spiritual gift they soon found great opportunity to employ it.

No Risk, No Gain---Only Loss

Inevitably, Jesus moves to the climax of his story. One man yet remains to give his accounting:

"He also who had received the one talent came forward, saying, 'Master, I knew you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow, and gathering where you did not winnow; so I was afraid, and I went and hid your talent in the ground. Here you have what is yours.' But his master answered him, 'You wicked and slothful servant! You knew that I reap where I have not sowed, and gather where I have not winnowed? Then you ought to have invested my money with the bankers, and at my coming I should have received what was my own interest. So take the talent from him, and give it to him who has the ten talents. For to every one who has will more be given, and he will have abundance; but from him who has not, even what he has will be taken away. And cast the worthless servant into the outer darkness; there men will weep and gnash their teeth.'

At first we may be a bit bewildered by what seems an unduly harsh treatment of the man with one talent, who at least had the responsibility to see that his master got back the money that he gave him without any loss. But the matter is put in perspective when we hear Jesus' words: "For to every one who has will more be given, and he will have abundance; but from him who has not, even what he has will be taken away." The basic purpose of life is growth, increase, return. To fail in this purpose is fundamentally unprofitable. All life grows, and if it does not, it has already ceased to live and is no longer worth keeping. Jesus means.

One Big Risk

This servant had gained nothing because he had risked nothing. There was no increase because there was no investment. He had a great (and long-continued) opportunity to risk himself on behalf of his master but he deliberately ignored it. The outcome tells us the nature of that opportunity. It was the opportunity to give himself to God; the opportunity to be redeemed. His supreme venture was a present possibility all through the time of his master's absence. But he had deliberately put it off rather early in the game. He had gone and hid it in the ground! When it was safely buried he could forget about it and go on with his own affairs. It was not there to make him uncomfortable by constantly reminding him of his master's expectations. In taking no risk for Christ's sake he had also no spiritual influence, no impact for eternal good. His life counted for nothing; there was no spiritual power. It had all been lived for himself.

When the master returns, the man has a little speech carefully prepared to justify it all. Evidently he had rehearsed it. "I know you are," he says, "a basically unreasonable man. You expect other people to do the dirty work while you get all the benefits. If I should fail to satisfy your expectations you are quite ready to accuse them as thieves. So I was afraid to risk what you gave me. I should lose it and would have to face your wrath when you returned. But I have outwitted you. I have kept your talents safe. Here is your return. Here is exactly what you gave me. You and I are even."

The master does not attempt to debate his character with the man. He takes him at his own appraisal of his master. "I know you are," he says, "a basically unreasonable man. You expect other people to do the dirty work while you get all the benefits. If I should fail to satisfy your expectations you are quite ready to accuse them as thieves. So I was afraid to risk what you gave me. I should lose it and would have to face your wrath when you returned. But I have outwitted you. I have kept your talents safe. Here is your return. Here is exactly what you gave me. You and I are even."

with a question mark. The master is not agreeing with what the servant says, he is saying, in effect, "So that is your my character, is it? All right, then, out of your own mouth will I judge you. If that's what you thought of me, then you known that you couldn't possibly please me by failing to get some kind of gain. In that case, you could at least have the bank and I would have had some interest on it when I returned."

The Phony Revealed

Of course, the real problem is that the man had no intention of really being the servant he was pretending to be. The is: No matter what his opinion of his master was, whether true or distorted, as a true servant he should have acted he knew his master would expect. But this the man refused to do. He had his own life to live and it was really nothing servant's fundamental task is to serve, not himself, but his lord. He was therefore a phony, a hypocrite, pretending to not.

In his selfish blindness what he did not realize was that his one chance to become genuine was to risk himself, by ve master's talent. Had he done so, like the other two men, he would have gained. He would himself have been changed, to be changed. To risk for Christ's sake is to find oneself altered, redeemed, reborn. That one talent is given to all who follow Christ. They have the opportunity to risk themselves upon his word, to trust his redeeming grace, to rest their upon his work for them upon the cross. Other opportunities for risk will follow that, but without that one investment value to life.

As C.S. Lewis vividly puts it: "It may be a hard thing for an egg to become a bird; it is a jolly sight harder for it to le it is still an egg. We are like eggs, today, and we either must be hatched, or go bad!"

What is the final message of Jesus in telling this story? It is: Step out! Risk! Live dangerously! Take constant chances and goods for his name's sake. Don't try to bottle up your life so as to hang on to it at all costs. If you do that you But surrender yourself to his cause, again and again. That is the way to find life. That is the way to watch for his co risked yourself to become a Christian, now risk yourself again and again as opportunities arise. Live dangerously! Or th written, love dangerously! To live for Christ is to love men with his love. And that is always a risk. It has been well v

"To love at all is to be vulnerable. Love anything and your heart will certainly be wrung and possibly be broken. If you want of keeping it intact you must give your heart to no one, not even to an animal. Wrap it carefully around with hobbies and avoid all entanglements, lock it up safe in the casket or the coffin of your selfishness. But in that casket-safe, dark, mot will change. It will not be broken, it will become unbreakable, impenetrable, irredeemable. The only place outside Heaven w be perfectly safe from all the dangers and perturbations of love is hell." *

Prayer

Lord Jesus, have I ventured anything for you? Have I risked my life for your sake? Or have I but transferred my ambitio world of business or sport to the world of religion, still busy seeking self-aggrandizement, self-exaltation? Lord, teach abandon, to fling away what would minister only to myself. For your name's sake, Amen.

THE UNCONSCIOUS TEST

Chapter Thirteen. Matthew 25:31-46

This is the last chapter. If you've sneaked ahead to read it out of order because you can't wait to find out how it all ends, don't worry. You can read it now, but it won't make as much sense as if you read it at the end of the book. So, please, don't read it now. Wait until you've finished the rest of the book. It will make much better sense to you then.

the days of his flesh, "despised and rejected of men." It will be a severe test of true love to show kindness toward the object of furious hatred by the Lawless One and the authorities of earth in that day.

On the other hand, others feel that by "my brethren" the Lord is simply indicating any individual among the sheep or goats in need in the last days and to whom loving help is either extended or withheld. Whichever view is held, it is evident that the basis of our Lord's judgment then are not different from the principles by which he judges men throughout the centuries. "For as he was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end, Amen." He will distinguish the hypocrites from among the sheep exactly on the same basis as he distinguished them then.

Let us now return to the scene our Lord describes, when he will do what no other figure in human history is capable of: he will abolish national distinctions, unite all the nations as one, and sit as the unchallenged Judge over all men:

"Then the King will say to those at his right hand, 'Come, O blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me, I was naked and you clothed me, I was sick and you visited me, I was in prison and you came to me.'"

The Real Test

The arresting thing about this is that Jesus is clearly saying that the ultimate mark of an authentic Christian is not his faith, or his Bible knowledge, but the concern which he shows to those who are in need. The practical demonstration of love is the final proof. And note also that Jesus does not ask anyone to present his case or argue his cause. He asks no questions, he simply extends to this one group the invitation, "Come, O blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." That is the basis of his choice. He has simply noted that when they had opportunity to help someone in need, they did it. No excuses are required. It is sobering to realize that Jesus identifies himself with those in need. If you help them, he says, you are helping me, and if you ignore them you are ignoring me. He flings the cloak of relationship around them and calls them "my brethren." In the parable of the Good Samaritan, Dr. Helmut Thielicke says:

"How easily we let a sentence like 'God is a God of love' pass over our lips. It even sounds a bit trite. But just let Jesus stand before us and look at us when we say the words and at once this pious little saying becomes an accusation. Then all of a sudden we remember the beggar we shooed from our door yesterday, the servant-girl we dismissed, perhaps because she was going to have a child whose name has recently been dragged through the newspapers because of some disgraceful affair, whom we let know that we were on the straight and narrow path. Suddenly we hear them all speaking it, because this saying has something to do with all of us. It is with the God who dwells above the clouds, for in them the eyes of the Lord himself are gazing at us." *

The sheep who inherit the kingdom are those who have responded to these needs in love, concern, and ministry. They have done so at considerable cost or risk to themselves. But no matter, they did what they could. With the goats it is the opposite. "Then he will say to those at this left hand, 'Depart from me, you cursed, into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels.' For I was hungry and you gave me no food, I was thirsty and you gave me no drink, I was a stranger you did not welcome me, naked and you did not clothe me, sick and in prison and you did not visit me.'"

The seriousness of this matter of helping the needy is seen in the severity of the Lord's words here. "Depart from me, you cursed, into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels." And let us remember that these are people who honestly think they are sheep. They can point with pride to a moment when they made a profession of belief, they are, perhaps, dogmatic about a certain set of beliefs, members in good standing, but by their lack of response to the pleas for help that come to them from every side they are goats—false sheep—who never were sheep at all.

What a Surprise!

The reaction of both the sheep and the goats to the Lord's words is one of stunned surprise. They are completely taken aback, he says. It is clearly evident that both groups expected a different basis of judgment. As they were being divided into sheep and goats another they doubtless felt they knew the reason for the choice. Surely the sheep would feel that the basis was that they were good members in good standing, but by their lack of response to the pleas for help that come to them from every side they are goats—false sheep—who never were sheep at all. Can't you see them waiting to come before the King, each one nervously reviewing his testimony, trying to recall the promises of the great promises on which he would rest all his hopes for this moment?

But the strange thing is, not one is ever given the chance to say a word. The issue is already settled. Each person is judged according to which group he belongs.

"Then the righteous will answer him, 'Lord, when did we see you hungry and feed you, or thirsty and give you drink? And when did we see you a stranger and welcome you, or naked and clothe you? And when did we see you sick or in prison and visit you?'"

But of course the issue really is one of faith. The sheep are asked to take their place on the right hand of the throne because their lives their genuine faith has been producing its inevitable fruit of good works. Unthinkingly, unconsciously, born of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, they have been responding to the pleas and the needs of those about them. They kept no records, they made no accounts. For them it has been a glad privilege. They were unaware they were doing anything unusual, but found a real delight in ministering to the needs of others. There was no hardship involved. They felt it was a continuing joy to be permitted to minister in Christ's name. Not one deed performed in that way has ever escaped the eye of their watching Lord. There is no need for him to examine their accounts. They had laid up abundant treasure in heaven.

But the goats are equally surprised. They, too, are caught off guard by this basis of judgment:

"Then they also will answer, 'Lord, when did we see you hungry or thirsty or a stranger or naked or sick or in prison, and did not minister to you?'"

Yet they may have guessed even more closely than the sheep the true basis for judgment. Very likely they are sure that their good works. They know that God is interested in the poor, the down-trodden, the oppressed, and they are all ready for him. They have been making long mental lists of the many times they have ministered to those in need about them. They can recall clear descriptions of what they did. They can total up large sums of money given, complete with income tax receipts. No doubt the amount of money so expended is terribly impressive, for as someone has remarked, it takes a great deal of philanthropy to do good. They have even put in long hours working for charity, fighting for racial equality, or protesting sub-standard housing. They have even justified persons the King replies: "Truly, I say to you, as you did it not to one of the least of these, you did it not to me."

Good Works That Aren't Good

They are even more surprised than the sheep at the Lord's words. It was good deeds of the very type he describes that they were depending upon for acceptance in this hour. They are at a total loss to understand his rejection. But they have forgotten the Sermon on the Mount. There he is careful to tell us that deeds done "to be seen by men" already have their reward. If deeds are not publicly known, if they are done for private satisfaction they are in the same category. "Let not your left hand know what your right hand does," he says. That is, do not even take note of what you do yourself; do not even privately pat yourself on the back.

It is the times which they have forgotten that he uses for judgment, and not the times they remember. It is the times when some begging hand reached out. The times they were busy with other demands when word came of a friend dying. The times when they refused, through shame or pride, to visit some poor wretch in prison lest they be associated with him. Their eyes were averted as they walked around the stricken man lying by the wayside. They turned deaf ears to pleas for help. They have helped. But these incidents have long been forgotten. They are quite honest when they say in astonishment, "Lord, when did we see you...?"

But this is false Christianity, no matter how much it may be dressed in ritualistic clothes. Perhaps nothing can describe it better than this prayer, written by Richard Woike. He calls it "A Prayer to Avoid" but we might well term it, "The Prayer of a Good Christian."

"O thou pleasant, comfortable, kindly, good-natured God: How glad I am to be born on another ordinary day. Keep me free from anything that strains my faith from disquiet, from any unnecessary strain, from anything especially those involving sickness or death, or the necessity of extending financial aid to relatives and friends."

About the future and the darkening trend of things, keep me from thoughtfulness. Events rush on, the world travails. Can so many headlines prove thy hand's at work this very moment, bringing near that fateful cry, 'Behold! He comes!?' O, Lord, such discourses fill my thoughts! Keep me from worrying about such things, and guide me safely to and from my office, and my home. Amen." *

How Man Judges; How God Judges

Nothing reveals more sharply the radical difference between God's judging and man's than this story of the sheep and our treasured "good deeds" are shown up for what they are in the searching light from this throne of glory. Good deeds

"Watch at all times, praying that you may have strength to escape all these things that will take place, to stand before the Son of Man" (Luke 21:36).

Prayer

Holy Father, how easy it is to be orthodox in word and unorthodox in deed, to be compassionate in a meeting and at home. But thank you for the cleansing grace so freely available in the Lord Jesus. Teach us how to live by him; do and say is a manifestation of his life at work in us. In Jesus' name, Amen.
